Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (●). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

“How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?”

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

“Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?”

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

MICROLOG 95-04945 (1 fiche)

L'un des mythes les plus répandus au sujet de la rédaction non sexiste est la difficulté de modifier le français, comparativement à l'anglais, à cause de l'utilisation des genres féminin et masculin. Ce document vise à réfuter ce mythe en offrant un large éventail de suggestions, des tendances les plus audacieuses aux moins controversées. Il comprend des recommandations et des exemples authentiques, la plupart tirés des médias de langue française en Ontario. Il se veut un instrument de sensibilisation aux changements linguistiques. Les points précisément abordés sont les suivants : la langue évolue constamment ; rédiger sans discriminer ; employer les titres féminins ; et, comment former les féminins.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act contains provisions requiring a mandatory review by Parliament of the Act and its administration after five years of operation. The parliamentary review presents an opportunity to explore a broader range of enforcement options, including the use of administrative monetary penalties. This paper discusses four possible models for the external review by an independent, adjudicative body. The violator could appeal to: the provincial criminal courts; the Federal Court; a permanent administrative tribunal; or an ad hoc administrative tribunal. An example of possible costs of each model is also provided.

An Agenda and framework for educational assessment

By Philip Nagy. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1991. 26 p. : Bibl. Presented at the Annual Meeting of the Canadian Society for the Study of Education. ONTERIS ON06772 MICROLOG 95-05298 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this paper is to propose a framework for linking together educational assessment and education. It is intended as a cautionary note on the direction of development in measurement/assessment, and it also addresses the question of whether authentic assessment is authentic enough, that is, whether it addresses a broad enough set of educational outcomes. Defines measurement as the theoretical quantitative aspects of a more broadly defined assessment. Compares the type of information educational assessment might provide to that which education requires. This comparison is used to present a challenge for traditional assessment theory that will encourage its incorporation into a more broadly conceived technology of educational assessment. Argues that a split is developing between educational information needs and the direction of development within educational measurement in recent years. Proposes a framework, the central element of which is a matrix of the information needs of the educational community by the types of educational outcome data that a broad conception of assessment might provide. Discusses quantitative methodology as opposed to a more collaborative 'authentic' one. Concludes with discussion of proposed matrix. Lists references. ED ON OR PR SS

This report describes the application of an integrated agro-ecological modelling system constructed around Agriculture Canada's Canadian Regional Agriculture Model (CRAM) to analyze the economic and environmental impacts of proposed agricultural policies. The modelling system consists of an agricultural decision component and an environmental component, and incorporates costs for three representative tillage systems. The report details the enhancements made to CRAM in order to construct the modelling system and presents the results of an assessment of the resource implications of the Gross Revenue Insurance Plan in the Prairie Provinces. The investigators also performed two sensitivity analyses to gauge the model's sensitivity to estimated risk parameters in the model and to variations in assumptions about tillage and crop mix distributions. Management of the vast majority of forest land in coastal British Columbia is based on clearcutting, a practice which has come under intense scrutiny that has prompted a demand to employ alternative practices based on partial cutting. This has led to a study to identify alternative silvicultural systems applicable in the province's second-growth coastal forests. This report presents results from the first phase of this study, which included identification of the most promising combinations of timber harvesting and silvicultural systems for use in those forests as well as the identification of potential sites, sponsors, and equipment for field trials of those systems. The report also describes silvicultural treatments required to implement each system and outlines the factors influencing the choice of harvesting systems for each type of cutting within a given alternative.

L'habitation a une incidence majeure sur l'utilisation de l'énergie au Canada. Le chauffage, la climatisation et l'exploitation de notre parc résidentiel représentent environ 20 % de la consommation énergétique totale. Ce document présente une vue d'ensemble des améliorations éconergétiques résidentielles au Canada. Les objectifs de cette étude sont les suivants : évaluer les besoins du marché canadien et des intervenants clés et les possibilités qui s'offrent à ces derniers sur le plan de l'amélioration éconergétique du parc résidentiel existant; donner un aperçu des mesures antérieures et actuelles d'amélioration éconergétique; et, énumérer et évaluer les options d'accroissement de l'activité d'amélioration éconergétique.

Expose les attentes du ministère en matière d'élaboration et de mise en oeuvre d'une politique locale d'aménagement linguistique à l'égard du français. Explique que l'aménagement linguistique est l'ensemble de mesures adoptées pour favoriser et valoriser l'emploi d'une langue, dans tous les domaines d'activités d'une société. Présente les avantages d'une politique d'aménagement linguistique: fait contrepoids à l'attrait et à l'omniprésence de l'anglais, assure la promotion du français et freine l'assimilation; favorise le bilinguisme additif (par opposition au bilinguisme soustractif) dont le français est l'une des composantes; permet de gérer les ressources disponibles et de déterminer les ressources supplémentaires nécessaires à l'excellence pédagogique; et appuie la communauté franco-ontarienne en créant des partenariats entre le milieu familial et scolaire, les institutions et le monde de travail. Discute des éléments d'une politique d'aménagement linguistique, des étapes d'élaboration et de mise en oeuvre, des rôles des intervenants, et des pistes à suivre.

L'ensemble des droits, devoirs ou obligations se rapportant aux familles se retrouve-t-il à l'intérieur du nouveau Code civil? Est-il conforme à l'Énoncé de politique en matière familiale? La réponse à ces questions structure cette étude en deux parties : la première compare les dispositions du Code civil au regard de la famille; la deuxième examine la concordance entre le nouveau Code civil et la politique familiale.

The Culture, Recreation and Tourism Task Force has several objectives, one of which is to identify the information products and associated inventory needs most needed by resource managers and decision makers. This report focuses on a study conducted to fulfill that objective. The report begins with a summary of an earlier report that determined the culture, recreation, and tourism inventory information that is being or has been collected. The report then presents results of a survey of agencies involved in culture, recreation, and tourism, including federal, provincial, and non-government agencies, resource managers, and resource users. The respondents explained their uses of inventory information and its effectiveness, and indicated what inventory information is needed. Finally, the report makes recommendations for the design of practical and effective culture, recreation, and tourism inventories.

The Large Lakes Kokanee Model (LLKM) is an interactive computer model that facilitates the process of tying lake-specific data to a series of functional relationships in the study of kokanee salmon populations in lakes. LLKM is designed to assist managers in anticipating the results of a variety of management actions in three main categories: regulations, stocking, and habitat alterations. LLKM is based on a variety of empirical relationships that link factors such as fish growth to density, and some of these relationships form dynamic links to lower trophic levels which are not explicitly modelled. Output consists of time series graphs of indicators such as fish size or catch per unit effort. This report presents five examples illustrating the use of LLKM in exploring such topics as competition among kokanee populations, kokanee population dynamics, and impacts of fishery enhancement.

This manual compiles government memoranda, fact sheets, sample work permits and applications, checklists, and sample authorizations relating to the actions taken during project planning, design, construction, or operation to alleviate adverse effects of the undertaking on fish habitat. The fact sheets provide information on fish habitat and the ways that various waterfront construction activities can affect that habitat. The sample permits, applications, and authorizations give an indication of the kinds of requirements faced by those involved in construction activities that could affect fish habitat. The manual also provides guidelines on the creation of new habitat or enhancement of existing habitat to replace habitat lost as a result of a specific undertaking. It includes a summary of selected fish habitat compensation activities in Ontario as well as examples of authorizations to compensate for fish habitat destruction.

In the post-war era, discussion of the prospects for a continued peace, or the eventuality of war, inevitably converge on the arms race. Controlling the arms race is argued by some to be a necessary element in the promotion of international stability. Others argue, however, that in fact arms control does little to contain the arms race, it simply codifies it. This paper provides a brief overview of the various forums in which arms control negotiations take place, some of the accomplishments achieved and, where appropriate, Canada's contribution to these.

Artistic talent, on the development and manifestation of artistic talent in young children, at home and at school

By Lynette Fast. Toronto : The author, 1994. 12 p. Presented at Ontario Educational Research Council Conference. ONTERIS ON07412
MICROLOG 95-05296 (1 fiche)

Supervisors of approximately 60 pre-schools in a defined geographic area of southern Ontario were asked to nominate children for a study on the development and manifestation of artistic talent. Talent was defined by the researcher for the purposes of selection, and a checklist of characteristics was supplied. Because of the possibility of subjective teacher interpretation of the checklist, follow-up oral explanations were given, and classroom observations by one researcher were conducted. Later, a questionnaire was used to sample parents' perceptions on a number of factors which may have contributed to the development of their children's talent. Sixteen children out of a total population of 1630 were identified in 22 schools, and of these, 4 by 1 pre-school director. The paper considers the evidence which suggests that artistic ability is manifested when it is valued and when skills are learned through playful demonstration and practice, the communication of expectations, and reward of approximations. The level of innate satisfaction, cognitive development, and language facility may be significant determinants.

The Arts in the transition years : square pegs, round hole? An examination of the response by the arts in the Ottawa Board of Education to the new paradigm for the transition years

By Michael Wilson. Ottawa : Ottawa Board of Education, 1994. 13 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07420
MICROLOG 95-05297 (1 fiche)

States that an assumption of the Common Curriculum is that all curriculum delivery will be integrated within and across disciplines. Since programs in drama, dance, music and the visual arts have evolved separately, there has never been a tradition of thinking of the arts together, or of investigating common experience in the arts. In fact, the reverse has been emphasized as each discipline was formulated to offer unique qualities to general student learning. This paper discusses to what extent any notion of integration of the various art forms can be an improvement over past practice. Concludes by stating that the degree of accepted integration between the distinct art forms, and within the general curriculum is dependent on the recognized common ground that maintains basic principles in each of the arts. The 4 corners of dance, drama, music, and visual arts in the square peg of the traditional arts, can then be rounded to meet the stretching 'whole' of the Common Curriculum. The appendix lists the learning outcomes for the arts in the transition years.

To examine the distribution patterns during the primary spawning period of the snow crab, the authors conducted sampling surveys using crab traps at depths from 236 to 250 meters in the sea off Kyoto Prefecture, Japan. This paper presents the results of this survey, showing the summer and autumn distribution patterns of male crabs and of two groups of female crabs categorized as primiparous, just before and after the first mating, and multiparous, more than a year after mating. The paper also notes the differentiation in the distribution areas of small and large males and compares those distribution patterns with those of the female crabs.

The B.C. pavement smoothness and rut measuring guide : it's [its] use and application

By Michael E. Symons. Victoria : Ministry of Transportation and Highways, Geotechnical and Materials Engineering Branch, 1995. v, 26 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 95-05262 (1 fiche)

Modern highways in British Columbia must meet certain standards of quality, one of which is the smoothness of surface finish. Compliance with smoothness criteria is determined by objective physical measurement. To make such measurements, the provincial Ministry of Transportation and Highways developed a simple, inexpensive, and effective field tool called the BC Pavement Smoothness Gauge. The gauge is a two-meter aluminum beam supported on adjustable feet at each end. The beam supports a sliding scale that measures beam-road distance at selected intervals along the beam. A digital unit attached by cable to the scale takes and stores readings made by the gauge. This document describes the gauge, its method of operation, the analysis of deviations in the readings, and procedures for determining the pavement smoothness rating.

Behaviour resource program (BRP), Perth County Board of Education

By Anne Robinson and Joel Herscovitch. S.I. : The authors, 1994. 6 p. [Presented at] Ontario Educational Research Council Conference, ON-TERIS ON07408
MICROLOG 95-05299 (1 fiche)

Describes a Behaviour Needs Program (BRP) developed in response to a survey conducted in the elementary schools of the Perth County Board of Education. Aggression, playground problems and disobedience towards staff were reported to be the most serious and disruptive student behaviours. Four schools chose to be involved in piloting the BRP, which had the following goals: to motivate students to work toward appropriate school behaviour and increase their chances for school success; to educate administrators, teachers and parents on how to deal with behaviour problems; and to reduce the amount of time school staff spent dealing with such problems. In a home-based reinforcement program students used points received in behaviour/communication books to earn privileges at home. Pre- and post-questionnaires were used to evaluate the program. Both principals and teachers felt that the BRP greatly helped reduce behaviour problems for program students. In the subsequent school years, the BRP continued and expanded to 2 more schools.

Blood, thicker than water : networks of local Chinese bureaucrats and Taiwanese investors in southern China

Taiwanese manufacturing investment in southern China is characterized by small and medium sized independent firms that negotiate with local governments in the capital-receiving regions. The effectiveness of this investment is achieved under two major favorable conditions: the newly-gained economic autonomy of local governments in southern China and the cultural affinity between the Taiwanese investors and their local agents in China. This paper describes the increasing local economic autonomy and the new role of middle- to low-level bureaucrats as one of the main institutional foundations of the new type of foreign direct investment in southern China. It then discusses the cultural elements that have facilitated Taiwanese investors in establishing interpersonal networks with local Chinese bureaucrats. The discussion focuses on the practice of network-building on the basis of gift or favor exchange in a specific institutional context.

By Garry Horne and Charlotte Powell. Victoria : Ministry of Finance and Corporate Relations, Analysis and Evaluation Branch, 1995. 44 p. : Maps
MICROLOG 95-05075 (1 fiche)

This report presents economic information about 63 local areas in British Columbia. Specifically, it provides tables and maps which identify the sources of income which support the local economies in each area. In addition, the report presents ratios which economists can use to estimate the impacts on employment and income of changes in those sources of income. The 63 local areas cover the entire province except for Greater Vancouver. The results in the report rely on an economic base perspective, whose fundamental premise is that the economy of a community can be represented by income flows that can be classified as basic or nonbasic, depending on where the income comes from. The report illustrates the use of the tables for estimating economic impacts by means of a number of examples.

This study examines the role, significance, and consequences of participatory management styles in nonprofit housing. A participatory management style includes resident involvement, and in some cases, control over decisions which affect their community and living environment. The study report first provides an overview of Canadian social housing, followed by a review of participatory management. That review studies the methods, expectations, and results of participatory management in order to ascertain what structures are needed to make resident participation viable, especially for women. The next section presents the findings from a case study on resident participation of two nonprofit housing societies in the Vancouver area that have included residents in decision-making. Finally, the report discusses the housing policy implications of the research.

The domestic airline industry in Canada has evolved from being a monopoly to being almost completely deregulated. If our carriers are to survive in the new global environment, they must address the competitive position of Air Canada and Canadian Airlines International (CAL) and their feeder networks, North American and international markets, and various options for restructuring. This report discusses government policy shifts in the airline industry between 1979-84 and 1985-88 and the current situation.

In July 1984, the major portion of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act was proclaimed in force. This statute brought into existence a new civilian security intelligence service, and terminated the previous Security Service, which had functioned as part of the RCMP. Passage of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act made Canada one of the few western democracies to give its security service an explicit statutory charter. In many ways, it constituted an attempt to bring the security intelligence function under more effective control. This review gives a brief background of the legislation, outlining the significant features of the process that led to its passage. It then deals with the contents of the legislation, and concludes with a treatment of some of its more controversial elements.

The precautionary principle, while subject to varying interpretations and having over 12 different definitions in international treaties and declarations, is fast becoming a fundamental principle of international environmental law. This paper explores the precautionary principle, referred to by some as the precautionary approach, from five perspectives. Section one introduces the history, scope and spectrum of meanings surrounding the principle. Section two highlights the principle's implementation in national legal systems. Section three examines the close relationship of precaution with other principles of sustainable development, particularly pollution prevention, inter-generational equity and public participation. Section four discusses the relationship of the precautionary principle to science and scientific research. Section five suggests legal options for incorporating the precautionary principle into CEPA, for example, through a preambular statement or specific factoring into substantive parts.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms came into force on 17 April 1982. This analysis concentrates on section 2 of the Charter, which deals with Canadians' "fundamental freedoms". The section affirms that everyone has the following freedoms: conscience and religion, thought, belief, opinion, and expression, which is stated to include freedom of the press and other media of communication. Also grouped under this heading are the freedoms of peaceful assembly and association. There can be little dispute that the denial of one or more of these freedoms would have a profound effect on everyone in Canada.

This report describes results of an inventory of the various information sources relating to the British Columbia coastal zone and held by government agencies, universities. The research conducted for the inventory relied heavily on interviews with data collectors and resource users. The results presented include a summary of the characteristics of the 107 data sets identified, a survey of the information needs of data set users, and an overview of common data requirements that provides the framework for a recommended British Columbia Coastal Data Set. The report also makes recommendations for coordinated data collection on coastal resources. Appendices include a contact list of those surveyed, a listing of coastal resource data sets by category, and tabulations of survey responses.

This report provides an assessment of the status of the coastal inventory programs in British Columbia. The report details the results of a strategic user-collector survey undertaken to provide information related to coastal inventory products and their use. The report then outlines the issues facing coastal inventory users and collectors in the 1990s, including lack of province-wide information, information access, data collection and classification standards, data reliability and quality, the need for base maps, organizational issues, training of inventory staff, native participation, and jurisdiction. Appendices include outlines of results of coastal data producer/user surveys conducted in 1977 and 1987.

Le capital est l'un des facteurs à prendre en considération lorsqu'il s'agit d'évaluer le degré de sécurité et de solidité d'une institution membre de la Société d'assurance-dépôts du Canada. Une assise financière suffisante sert en effet de coussin de sécurité contre les divers risques auxquels une institution s'expose dans le cours normal de ses affaires, en absorbant les pertes éventuelles et en inspirant confiance aux déposants, aux créanciers et aux autres tiers. Energy conservation concerns and new building codes have an effect on specifications for clearances around combustion appliance flues and for airtightness of flue penetrations. As part of ongoing research in combustion clearances to aid in code evaluation and to promote energy efficiency in residential buildings, this study examines two cases of combustion flue clearances. The first case investigated temperatures in an attic chimney clearance space, showing the temperature effects on the wood joists in the clearance space. The second studied exterior vent chase temperatures that result from various levels of insulation, furnace cycling times, and air infiltration rates. This investigation used the flue simulation program FLUESIM, and results of the simulation are presented. CA ND PL SC

In the late 19th century, a period of intense development in Shanghai led to the emergence of a dense residential pattern of housing called ilong. The recent massive phase of redevelopment in Shanghai is leading to demolition of vast amounts of ilong housing and relocation of its dwellers. To study the factors that both alleviate and contribute to the housing problem in Shanghai, this paper uses a holistic approach, linking field interviews and observations of inherent housing values in one particular ilong neighborhood with recent Chinese and English publications on China. The paper examines the factors affecting ilong dwellers in their access and quality of housing under the past delivery system based on public housing and under the present climate of housing reform and commercialization. Finally, the paper assesses current housing alternatives for ilong dwellers and proposes policy modifications that consider both the community and commodity value of inner city housing and neighborhoods. This report compares site location decisions for two hypothetical plants, typically found in the Fraser Valley, that process British Columbia cedar and hemlock in either the Fraser Valley or in Whatcom County, Washington. To make valid comparisons of plants on either side of the border, it was essential that the model plants were representative of the region's remanufacturing industry and that they were identical in both locations. The report presents the results of the comparison in terms of costs, resource security, community acceptance and support, financial incentives, labor, industrial land prices, taxes, and transportation facilities. It also makes some recommendations regarding strategic initiatives for the wood remanufacturing industry in the Fraser Valley.

One of the major limitations to evaluating the need, timing, and intensity of forest vegetation treatments is the lack of an appropriate quantitative technique for assessing the nature of the non-crop vegetation component and linking that to conifer crop tree size, growth, and vigor. This report documents a data capture program developed for collecting and analyzing competition index data and results. It includes procedures for data collection and editing, data analysis, data downloading and archiving, and report generation. The program, written in GW-BASIC, is designed to run on a MS-DOS compatible computer with a minimum of 256K system memory and a 640K random access memory disk. The program is capable of displaying or printing the competition index values by species following each plot. Conflict of interest is one aspect of public sector ethics. Over the past 20 years, Canadian legislatures and governments have developed legislation and codes of conduct that show a wide variety of approaches to the issue. This paper focuses on the most important developments at the federal level. The emphasis is on federal legislators but other federal public officials, such as public servants, judges, and members of administrative agencies, tribunals and Crown corporations are also affected by conflict of interest rules.

Ce document ne traite que des mesures les plus importantes adoptées au palier fédéral. Il porte principalement sur les législateurs fédéraux. Specifically, the research had 4 objectives which were pursued through answers to 15 related questions. These objectives were: to deepen the understanding of the nature and causes of what CEOs do; to describe the nature of selected influences outside the local school system, and probable future changes in such influences; to examine the relationship between CEO practices and selected components of the school system; and to identify implications for future systems administration. The project was undertaken as a series of 8 sub-studies by individuals and small teams of principal investigators.

The Continuous dynamic network loading problem : a mathematical formulation and solution method

By Jia Hao Wu, Yang Chen and Michael Florian. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1995. 32 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 95-25) MICROLOG 95-05357 (1 fiche)

The continuous dynamic network problem aims to find, on a congested network, temporal network flows, arc travel times, and path travel times given time-dependent path flow rates for a given time period. This problem may be considered as a sub-problem of a temporal (dynamic) traffic assignment problem. This paper studies this problem and formulates it as a system of functional equations. For computational purposes, the authors develop a polynomial approximation which is almost equivalent to the original formulation on a set of finite discrete points. The approximation formulation is a finite dimensional system of equations which is solved as an optimization problem. The paper includes several numerical examples to illustrate the approach developed.

Harvesting and mechanical site preparation of northwestern Ontario jack pine sites may favor the increased regeneration of trembling aspen on those sites. Controlling the amount of aspen allowed to regenerate on former jack pine dominated sites is an important concern in current silvicultural strategy, but biological and time limitations of aerial tending with the presently registered herbicides (notably glyphosate) are a major challenge to the ability of foresters to manage aspen. This report describes the initiation of studies at the jack pine dominated Brightsands forest in the Thunder Bay district. The study is to evaluate six post-harvest manual herbicide ground application treatments for controlling aspen regrowth compared to aerial chemical site preparation with Vision (glyphosate). The report gives information on the experimental design, treatments to be used, plot location and design, and project schedule.

Critical issues for rural students in transition : a dialogical and contextual approach to interpretive research

By Mary-Ellen Walsh. Huron Park, ON : The author, 1994. 16 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07419 MICROLOG 95-05281 (1 fiche)

Examines the transition from elementary to secondary school for rural students within the political context of recently mandated changes to education in the transition years in Ontario. Explains that legislation to 'destream' grade 9, and the introduction of a common curriculum at the transition level have provoked a mixed reaction from teachers, parents and students, particularly in rural areas where many perceive the changes as responding more to the needs of students in culturally diverse urban areas. States that rather than examine school culture as a way to investigate student experience and attitudes toward change, it is better to examine particular contextual factors influencing schools, such as school structure, size, and teacher experience. Explains that as the study progressed, the focus of interpretation shifted from school culture analysis to focus on the relationship between context, school culture, and participants' views of rural transition and the need for change. Explores also the connection between context, perspectives on change, and teacher purpose. Conducts a case

Feathermoss is a group of large pleurocarpus mosses which are featherlike in appearance and which often form continuous mats beneath coniferous forest cover. This report, designed to assist Ontario resource managers in developing site-specific vegetation management strategies, describes the common feathermoss species found in the province, their habitat and survival requirements, reproduction, growth and development, phenology, response to disturbances such as overstory removal and site preparation, interdependence with conifers, and uses by wildlife. A glossary is included. CA LS ON PR SC

By Lisa J. Buse and F.W. Bell. Thunder Bay, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, Vegetation Management Alternatives Program, 1992. vi, 138 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. Cover title: Pocket guide to : critical silvics of selected crop and competitor species in Northwestern Ontario. ISBN 0772994854 MICROLOG 95-05102 (1 fiche)

This guide contains information on 25 plant species which may compete with conifer crop species, and on six commercially important conifer species. The guide summarizes information on the autecology of each species in the context of the Northwestern Ontario Forest Ecosystem Classification. In addition, it evaluates each of the potential competitors with respect to their competitive effects and mechanisms, their response to disturbance and silvicultural treatments (including their adaptation to forest canopy removal, cutting, mechanical site preparation, fire, and herbicides), and their potential value for wildlife. The guide similarly evaluates the six conifer species with respect to their response to competition and ability to respond to release. Summary tables enable quick comparison between species. This guide will assist forest resource managers in developing site-specific vegetation management strategies. FO LS ON PR SC

An edited collection of papers presented at an international conference on Transforming Mine Migrancy in the 1990s. MICROLOG 95-04937 (3 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This book attempts to cultivate an understanding of the complexity and depth of the problem of removing and restructuring the visible and invisible boundaries of South African mine migrancy and the hardships they represent. The book consists largely of edited papers first presented at the Transforming Mine Migrancy in the 1990s conference, Cape Town, 1994. Subjects of these papers include the history of mine migrancy, mine hostels and housing, miner health and insecurity, migrancy in southern Africa, economic and social issues, and future changes in mine migrancy policies. ### Decision support for vehicle dispatching using genetic programming

By Ilham Benyahia and Jean-Yves Potvin. Montréal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1995. 21 p. : ill., Bibl. (Publication / Université de Montréal. Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 95-23) MICROLOG 95-05066 (1 fiche)

Vehicle dispatching is aimed at allocating real-time service requests to a fleet of vehicles in movement. This paper models the problem as a multiattribute choice problem, in which different attribute values are associated with each vehicle in order to describe their situation with regard to the current service request. The study uses genetic programming to find a utility function, based on those attribute values, that approximates the decision process of a professional dispatcher. The paper reports the computational results of requests collected from a courier service company and compares the results to those of a backpropagation neural network model.

This report is a detailed design document for a computer-based decision support system (DSS) for the management of pests in regenerating forest stands in British Columbia. It first describes the current forest management situation in the province with respect to regenerating stands as well as the problems created by pests of young stands that can be addressed by a DSS. The next chapter details the scope and bounds of a DSS and lists the priority pests for inclusion into the system. A detailed design for the DSS is followed by a proof-of-concept prototype developed for the spruce leader weevil. The next chapter summarizes the data and information that can be used to build the DSS for each of the priority pests that have been identified. The report concludes with a presentation of a plan for the future development and maintenance of a complete DSS for the identified priority pests of young stands in British Columbia.

This project's goal is to develop a Competition Tolerance Index (CTI) for black spruce, jack pine and eastern white pine that is based on structural and physiological seedling features, and which could be used to determine seedling/stocktype competitive ability. This report covers the 1st of a 4-year study intended to relate initial seedling structural and physiological attributes to performance under herbaceous competition. Bareroot and container seedlings of jack pine, white pine and black spruce were outplanted under herbaceous 'vegetation' and 'no-vegetation' treatments. Stocktype performance was assessed anatomically, morphologically, and physiologically.

Development of a simple method to determine the fraction of internal gains that contribute to an increase in cooling load in air conditioned Canadian homes

The authors have developed a simple correlation equation for predicting seasonal residential cooling energy consumption in eight representative Canadian cities. Inputs to the equation are internal gains, envelope U-values, glazing area, and shading coefficient. Separate equations of the same form are used for mechanically cooled residences with or without ventilation cooling. Furthermore, the authors developed monthly correlations for the five months of the Canadian cooling season for mechanically cooled residences with or without ventilation cooling, and investigated the effect of mass on these correlations. This report describes the development of the seasonal and monthly cooling energy correlation equations and compares their predictions with those of the hourly simulation model from which they were derived.

The problem of condensation and pooling of water during the first spring and summer of freshly poured concrete basement walls, insulated on the inside, has continued to affect builders in spite of solutions proposed by the research community. A review of the literature and of recent cases of basement condensation has suggested a new hypothesis for the cause of the problem. This report presents results of a study investigating this hypothesis using advanced computer simulation techniques to examine the combined heat, air, and moisture transfer processes occurring in the basement wall. The study methodology consisted of 11 simulations using the Florida Solar Energy Center model, applied with varying conditions to explore the sensitivity of condensation potential to different basement and wall characteristics and boundary conditions. The report also suggests ways to address the condensation problem.

Development of the sand barrier method of excluding termites

By Timothy G. Myles. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, 1994. v, 50 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-05014 (1 fiche)

Sand barriers have been proposed as a non-toxic alternative to the chemical barrier method of termite control. The sand particles in these barriers are too large for termites to move but the interstices between the particles are too small for the termites to crawl through. The investigators conducted laboratory penetration bioassay studies using the eastern subterranean termite, Reticulitermes flavipes, in addition to field tests using five potential barrier sands. This report presents the results of those studies and tests, and makes recommendations regarding the size distribution limits of effective particle sizes of a termite barrier sand. The report also evaluates the cost effectiveness of sand barriers for termite control in new housing and in retrofit applications.

Wood quality is the suitability of wood for a particular end-use. This report discusses wood anatomy and tree growth in terms of macroscopic and microscopic features of a tree examined in cross-section. It describes end-use requirements with regard to lumber grading, and introduces the following wood quality attributes, discussing their practical implications for wood processing and wood products: wood density, density variation, juvenile/mature wood distribution, proportion of heartwood/sapwood, fiber length, fibril angle, compression, knots, grain, and extractives. Also discussed is the potential for influencing tree growth characteristics and wood quality through stand stocking control.

Dispersal and colonization of arboreal forage lichens in young forests

Arboreal lichens are an important winter forage item for wildlife. These lichens are typically sparse in second-growth forests and there is a need to develop means of enhancing their abundance as part of wildlife management efforts. This study examines the dispersal and colonization of fragments of arboreal lichens (Alectoria, Bryoria, and Usnea species) in selected second-growth stands on Vancouver Island. The study focused mainly on relationships between the colonization of second growth by lichens and three variables: the area of lichen-bearing timber within dispersal range, distance to lichen-bearing timber, and the biomass and vertical distribution of lichen in the timber. The study also examined genus-specific differences in rates of dispersal and colonization. This paper presents the results of the study and discusses their implications for forest management.

Land treatment sites were established near Lloydminster, Grande Prairie, and Drayton Valley in 1982, and near Brooks in 1983 to study the feasibility of using this technique for the disposal of oil field wastes in Alberta. A variety of rates and types of oily wastes were applied from 1982-85 in combination with cultivation and fertilization treatments. This report assesses soil productivity at the Lloydminster site and examines oil and asphaltene content of the soil, plant productivity and soil chemistry, plant uptake of organic contaminants, and studies groundwater and surface waters.

The objective of this study was to develop a nitrate data base for groundwater in New Brunswick. The data base was created on the INGRES data management system from 22 different datasets, including available federal, provincial, and municipal data in a variety of formats and contained on different media. This report describes the data base design and assessment of the quality of data, the implementation of the data base, and the potential use of the data base for examining temporal trends or relations in nitrate water quality. The report also discusses the complex challenges of integrating the various data sources and the serious limitations of the existing data.

During the last few years, technological advances and the reorganization of the international framework of economies, societies, and states have brought about profound changes with widespread socioeconomic effects. This book reviews global trends and their effects on the environment and on reducing global diversity. These trends include the information revolution, development of global financial markets and of more efficient international transport, and international migration. Environmental natural consequences noted include global pollution, deforestation, water shortages, and destruction of large ecosystems. The author uses examples from Africa, Latin America, and the Caribbean to illustrate the history of environmental degradation and its relation to globalization. He also discusses the importance of clean energy for planetary survival, the urban environmental challenge, the importance of diversity for human survival, and strategies for the future.

As the frequency of near-surface mineral discoveries in the British Columbia Cordillera diminishes, exploration is more frequently focused on regions of high potential but mantled by consolidated sediments or drift, dominated by Quaternary deposits. This volume is a compilation of papers on various aspects of drift exploration, using examples from British Columbia. Topics of the papers include Quaternary geology, recognition of paleo-flow direction, drift potential mapping, drilling methods, glacial dispersal determination using indicator clasts, till geochemistry, biogeochemical sampling, lake sedimentology, laboratory techniques, shallow seismic methods, borehole analysis, and resistivity mapping. Case studies elaborating on drift exploration concepts are dispersed throughout the compilation.

A key element in urban transit planning is the ability to predict how passengers will behave for a certain fixed level of supply. This problem is generally called the passenger assignment problem. This paper examines passenger assignment on a congested radial transit network. The authors use the varying capacity concept introduced by Saidi et al, 1994, to address the case of the evening peak dynamic assignment problem. In this approach, the comfort capacity corresponds to the perception that users will have of the load limit. The authors first apply the approach to an isolated line and then extend it to common lines on a radial network. This paper presents the results of this approach as applied to a typical congested radial network, that of Tunis in Tunisia.

A key issue in urban transportation planning is the prediction of the spreading of the users on the network and their reactions to eventual perturbations in service, given the network configuration and the demand trend. This problem is known as the assignment problem. This paper addresses dynamic passenger assignment on a congested radial transit network, using the varying capacity concept introduced by Saidi et al, 1994. The paper introduces this approach and applies it to solve the assignment problem with no choice of departure time. The authors then relax this constraint to take into account the morning peak in demand. The paper includes results of numerical simulations of a radial transit network.

The Economic aspects of industrial water use -- Draft

The Industrial Water Demand research project had the primary task of empirically investigating the economic characteristics of observed water use by Canadian manufacturing firms. The major sources of information used were the extant economic literature concerned with modelling and measuring input demands and the data set generated by Environment Canada's 1981 Industrial Water Use Survey. This document reports the results from that project, including tables of statistically estimated equations for intake water demand and water use costs for different provinces and most manufacturing sectors. The report also discusses the usefulness of simple econometric models for explaining variances in industrial water use and the sensitivity of industrial water use to the price of water.

The contribution of residential construction investment is quantified in terms of employment and value added by industry. This research includes an examination of the major components of residential construction: new residential construction spending, alterations and improvements spending, and residential transfer costs. The contribution of these residential construction spending categories are differentiated by the stage of impact and on a disaggregated industrial basis.

The research presented in this report assesses the domestic cultivation and international market opportunities for commercial production of crops which yield essential oils and/or pharmaceutical products. The report reviews those opportunities for Canadian production of 48 botanical sources of essential oils and pharmaceuticals, seven of which are assessed in detail (monarda, fennel, dill, ginseng, evening primrose, borage, and digitalis). The remaining 41 varieties are reviewed with respect to economic potential, market information, and industry trends. Due to the general lack of data on essential oil and pharmaceutical crops, the research draws heavily on discussions with individuals in the agriculture, industrial, academic, and government sectors. The report also makes recommendations for increasing the economic and market potential for botanically sourced pharmaceuticals and oils.

This study begins with a discussion about the meaning of biological diversity, and an examination of various measures of biodiversity. The study then considers the underlying presuppositions of various groups in the biodiversity debate, including those of preservationists and developers. Two general approaches are used to analyze the economics of biodiversity: the use of cost benefit analysis to value all functions of the natural environment, and the safe minimum standard of conservation approach, which modifies the minimax principle of game theory. Finally, the study assesses the implications of the findings for the preservation of old-growth forests in British Columbia.

Leaded paint dust has been identified as a major potential source of lead contamination in housing when houses being renovated have significant quantities of leaded paint. Currently, Canada does not have specific regulations related to construction clean-up requirements for contractors and homeowners. This report outlines the results of a laboratory study to provide information on the effectiveness of construction dust clean-up activities that would be available to general contractors and homeowners. Vacuuming using a variety of wet/dry systems, sweeping, and wet mopping were done to standard carpet and vinyl flooring samples, with 28 different combinations investigated. All measurements were conducted in a full scale environmental chamber with controlled humidity and airflow. The total mass removal efficiency (MRE) of each cleanup method was determined gravimetrically and the recovered dust was analyzed to determine the size distribution and lead content. Dans la plupart des maisons canadiennes, la peinture intérieure contient une certaine quantité de plomb. Si, pendant des rénovations, la peinture était perturbée, le plomb pourrait se répandre dans la poussière occasionnée par les travaux de construction. A l'heure actuelle, il n'existe pas au Canada de règlement précis régissant les travaux de nettoyage en construction, à l'intention des entrepreneurs et des propriétaires-occupants. Ce rapport résume les résultats d'une étude en laboratoire sur le rendement des techniques de dépolissage de peintures à base de plomb réalisée pour la Division de la Recherche de la Société canadienne d'hypothèques et de logement.

Ce manuel sur l'éclairage public vise à expliquer, en termes simples, les principes de base de l'éclairage et le fonctionnement des sources lumineuses. Il décrit les composants d'un système d'éclairage (ballast, cellule photoélectrique, etc.) et parle de distribution lumineuse. Puis, il examine les différentes possibilités de conversion des luminaires à vapeur de sodium à haute et à basse pressions. Il aborde ensuite la question de l'entretien de ces luminaires et examine les divers facteurs qui nuisent au bon rendement du système d'éclairage. Puis finalement, il présente des exemples illustrant les économies réalisables par la conversion au sodium des luminaires au mercure.

Afin de répondre aux besoins pédagogiques et sociaux de certains élèves qui présentent des problèmes de comportements sévères, il est essentiel que le personnel éducatif travaille en collaboration, non seulement avec le foyer, mais également avec les organismes tant gouvernementaux que non gouvernementaux de façon à offrir à ces élèves des services et des programmes qui répondent à l'ensemble de leurs besoins. Ainsi, le protocole d'entente vise la prestation de services et l'aide aux écoles dans l'éducation des élèves qui manifestent des problèmes de comportements sévères et fournit un cadre pour un travail d'équipe dans la prestation des services et des programmes dispensés à ces élèves.

This study attempted to validate the Employability Skills Profile (ESP) with teachers in secondary schools in a rural and suburban setting. The study aimed to enhance teachers' knowledge of the ESP and then determine if there was a change in the degree of formal teaching of the skills in the classroom. Two secondary schools, 1 rural and 1 urban, participated in the study. Teachers completed a questionnaire ranking all the skills they believed were important to students under 3 categories: academic skills; personal management skills; and team work skills. Teachers also ranked the degree to which they incorporated the skills into their course content. Makes recommendations.

Cet ouvrage est une synthèse des 14 volumes des études de recherche. En dépit de leurs lacunes, celles-ci brossent un tableau assez complet de la pertinence des connaissances en énergie pour les pays en développement du point de vue des sciences naturelles et sociales au milieu des années 80. Chaque chapitre du document représente l'un des 14 volumes originaux. Chacun résume les principaux points et conclusions de chaque étude. Plus précisément, les points abordés sont les suivants : caractéristiques de la consommation d'énergie dans les pays en développement; demande d'énergie (analyse, gestion et économie); aspects économiques de l'énergie; électricité; pétrole et gaz; combustibles liquides de remplacement; énergie non classique; bioénergie; énergie humaine; planification énergétique et modèles, systèmes d'information et recherche-développement; et, l'énergie en Afrique, en Asie, en Chine et en Amérique latine.

The Energy Research Group was a joint project of the International Development Research Centre and the United Nations University. The Group commissioned over 100 reviews of energy-related research and technology relevant to developing countries as part of its mandate. Information from 60 of those reviews was published in 14 volumes. This book is a summary of those 14 volumes, presenting a reasonably complete picture of the relevance of energy knowledge to developing countries from the perspectives of the natural and social sciences in the mid-1980s. Each chapter in this book represents one of the original 14 volumes and summarizes the main points and conclusions of each review. Subjects of the volumes include patterns of energy use in developing countries; energy demand; energy economics; energy sources, including electricity, fossil fuels, and renewables; energy planning; and energy in Africa, Asia, China, and Latin America.

L'objet des enquêtes était de déterminer les taux d'exfiltration d'air à travers l'enveloppe des bâtiments, les taux de fuite d'air entre les appartements et entre les étages, ainsi que la qualité de l'air intérieur d'un nombre représentatif de tours d'habitation. Ainsi, les taux d'exfiltration et taux de fuite entre appartements et étages ont été calculés par des essais de dépressurisation des appartements, des étages et de l'immeuble entier. La qualité de l'air intérieur a été établie au moyen d'un sondage auprès des occupants des immeubles, ainsi que par la recherche et le contrôle de polluants particuliers.

Environmental taxation is the imposition of taxes, charges, and fees to discourage activities that are harmful to the environment or that exacerbate resource depletion. This study reviews the salient points in the current debate about the desirability of environmental taxation, guided by two key considerations: that environmental taxation is effective and that environmental taxation is in effect a grab for revenues or power. In reviewing those arguments, the study makes preliminary observations about selected principles that could be used to guide the setting of environmental taxes. It also examines the potential and the effectiveness of environmental taxes, as well as their distributional impacts. An appendix lists environment-related tax bills in the 101st Congress of the United States.

Most macroeconomic models used for forecasting and policy analysis require estimates of potential output. In these models, potential output represents the level to which real gross domestic product reverts as the effect of demand disturbances dissipates. In this paper, the authors apply an approach derived from the structural vector autoregression methodology to the Mexican economy in order to show how potential output can be estimated and projected. To identify demand, supply, and world oil shocks, the authors assume that demand shocks do not have a permanent effect on output and that the international price of oil is exogenous to the Mexican economy in the long term. They then calculate potential output by adding the world oil and supply components to the drift in output. The results demonstrate the relation between world oil shocks and potential output fluctuations.

Mesurer le degré d'humidité de l'air ambiant d'un bâtiment constitue la première démarche importante à entreprendre pour en évaluer les problèmes d'humidité. À cette fin, il suffit de disposer d'un simple appareil peu coûteux, affichant un degré raisonnable d'exactitude. Les objectifs de cette recherche consistent à déterminer l'exactitude et la durabilité des hygromètres à la portée des propriétaires-occupants et à mettre au point une méthode d'étalonnage simple. Six sortes d'hygromètres destinés au marché de la consommation ont fait l'objet de tests dans une chambre à atmosphère contrôlée. Ce document présente les résultats des essais d'étalonnage.

Le 12 juillet 1992, le ministre des Pêches et des Océans a annoncé un moratoire de deux ans sur la pêche de la morue du Nord. Le moratoire entraine en vigueur immédiatement. Des milliers de pêcheurs et de travailleurs d'usine étaient touchés par ce moratoire et avaient besoin d'un soutien financier. Afin de répondre à leurs besoins, le Ministre a annoncé la mise en oeuvre du Programme d'adaptation et de redressement de la pêche de la morue du Nord (PARPMN) dont l'objectif est d'offrir une aide financière immédiate aux pêcheurs et aux travailleurs d'usine visés et de planifier un avenir où la pêche occupera de moins en moins de place. Le coût initial prévu des composantes du PARPMN administrées par le ministère des Pêches et des Océans était de 587 millions. Le programme a pris fin en mai 1994. Les objectifs de cette étude consistaient à évaluer les composantes du Programme des Pêches et des Océans et de déterminer la mesure dans laquelle le programme a permis de contraindre les objectifs fixés.

The Davis turbine is a hydrodynamic version of the Darrieus rotor. It can operate successfully in a current with or without a dam, and with the water current flowing either way through the unit. Nova Energy has modified the turbine to improve its performance. The British Columbia government commissioned a study to determine if the Nova Energy turbine technology is viable, both economically and technically, and if so, how best to proceed with a demonstration project. This report presents the results of that study, describing the turbine design, the studies performed to date on the Davis turbine, the present status of the Davis turbine, and a large pilot plant project proposed by Nova Energy for the Queen Charlotte Islands. The report also estimates the costs of such a project and assesses markets available to the turbine, including tidal and river sites.

The authors of this report visited two trade fairs in Germany that exhibited wood products and wood processing technology. The first part of the report presents views on optimizing technology to perform the initial and critical breakout operation at any remanufacturing plant. This is followed by a description of the technology available to scan lumber visually and a discussion on latest advances in the production of building components used in timber construction. Finally, this section describes aids to maintaining quality control. The second part provides views on suitable trends for the British Columbia wood products industry with regard to products made from solid wood and glued wood. This section includes suggestions on how the prov-Ince's secondary wood products industry might capitalize on those trends, and reviews the latest developments in secondary wood processing machinery relevant to the industry's current needs.

This review provides the core material on family violence from psychological, sociological, legal and philosophical perspectives. With this understanding, effective and appropriate strategies for addressing family violence as it relates to women, children, seniors and persons with disabilities can be developed. The information contained in this review is primarily from the late 1980s and early 1990s and represents the research, thoughts, opinions and strategies from some of the leading professionals in North America interested in family violence. In addition, this report contains a review of the available film and video collections relevant to the police and family violence. Also, the report identifies key personnel across Canada whose primary responsibility is to network with each other and to provide family violence service delivery to their communities. By identifying these individuals, police in any region in Canada can "tap into" this network in order to identify potential training personnel.

To meet the needs of fishers and fish plant workers affected by the moratorium, the Minister announced the Northern Cod Adjustment and Recovery Program to provide immediate income assistance and to prepare for a significantly reduced fishery in the future. The Program ended in May 1994. This report presents results of a study undertaken to evaluate the four components of the program (income replacement, vessel support, early retirement, and groundfish license retirement) and to determine the degree to which the Program was effective in meeting its objectives. The report also discusses the lessons learned from the Program that may benefit the design of future programs intended to mitigate impacts associated with economic events of similar magnitude.

The Gender and Development Network has the purpose of bringing together scholars working with women in their communities to develop and discuss research strategies that empower women. This document presents summaries of papers presented at the first workshop of international members of the network. The workshop reviewed the status of women in the participants' respective countries, each participant presented a current research paper, and the participants discussed the network's formation and future directions. The summaries of the papers also include a synopsis of the discussion that took place at the workshop in response to each. Topics of the papers include women in agriculture and forestry, the role of women in community development, religion and patriarchy, gender sensitive planning, and the development of feminist values.

Future directions for Alberta's Heritage Fund : report

Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Review Committee. Edmonton : The Committee, 1995. 36 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 95-05037 (1 fiche)

The Alberta government established the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund in 1976 to set aside part of the province's oil and gas revenues for future generations. With decreases in those revenues in the 1980s, the province stopped putting money into the Fund in 1987. Since then, interest on the approximately $11 billion sitting in the Fund has been spent on such priority areas as education and social services. In a time of high public debt, the Alberta government has decided to reassess the role of the Fund and appointed a review committee to gather submissions from the public, including hearings and questionnaires, regarding future directions for the Fund. This report presents the findings of that committee and the committee's recommendations intended to help the government develop a clear, long-term vision for the Fund.

The purpose of this report is to serve as a source of information for those who wish to analyze Canada's federal income tax system and the Goods and Services Tax (GST). The report itself does not attempt to make judgements about either the appropriateness of government policy objectives or the effectiveness of the various tax provisions in achieving those objectives. The 1st part of the report discusses the tax expenditure concept in order to facilitate understanding of the quantitative estimates. It also discusses the calculation and interpretation of the costs of tax expenditures, including key assumptions used. The 2d part presents estimates of the costs of tax expenditures and memorandum items in the personal and corporate income tax systems and the GST. The report also includes several appendices. Descriptions of each tax expenditure as well as information on data sources and methodology used in constructing the estimates are presented for personal, then for corporate taxes, and finally for the GST.

This paper outlines some of the options for improving municipal government in the Haldimand-Norfolk region of Ontario. It summarizes the responses from public meetings and from municipal councils to a provincial review of municipal government in the region, with particular attention to issues involving municipal planning, policing, roads, representation, and finance. The paper concludes with a description of three fundamental options and some of the implication of each option. The first option would ask for legislation that would dissolve the regional municipality. The other two options would keep the regional municipality but would either ask for legislation to rationalize existing service and governance arrangements, or rely on municipal councils to continue to make improvements. Statistics relating to taxation and municipal staffing are included.

This debate places in the most acute conflict possible generally accepted Canadian multicultural and egalitarian social values and the libertarian value of freedom of expression.

Bon nombre de questions sont liées à la politique canadienne à l'égard des réfugiés. Ce bulletin est axé sur le rapport étroit qui existe depuis longtemps entre une préoccupation essentiellement humanitaire, à savoir l'accueil et l'établissement de ceux qui ne peuvent retourner dans leur mère patrie pour quelque raison que ce soit, et une considération foncièrement intéressée ou pragmatique, la politique d'immigration. Il doit y avoir un rapport entre la politique à l'égard des réfugiés et la politique d'immigration. Ce document cherche à savoir jusqu'à quel point les critères de la politique d'immigration devraient s'appliquer à la sélection à l'étranger des réfugiés qui souhaitent venir s'installer au Canada. ### The Impact of change : the implications of the government of Alberta's three year business plans for Albertans with disabilities

Edmonton : Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, 1994. 23 p. MICROLOG 95-05042 (1 fiche)

In April 1994, Alberta government departments delivered their three-year business plans. Total spending has been cut by about $2.7 billion since 1992/93, although spending for programs targeted to serving the needs of people with disabilities has remained relatively stable. Nevertheless, there is a real potential for funding problems related to disability-related programs as the provincial population ages. This report highlights the changes currently anticipated as a result of implementing Alberta's three-year business plans. The report is intended to assist organizations in preparing for the future, and outlines anticipated changes in the areas of training, employment, education, recreation, transportation, housing, accessibility, personal supports, and financial support. ### Impact of mandatory sprinklering of multi-unit residential buildings : final report

By IBI Group ; In association with Larden Muniak Consulting Inc. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, 1993. v, 127 p. : Ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 95-05049 (2 fiche)

This report summarizes an investigation of the cost-effectiveness of installing automatic fire sprinklers in new low- and high-rise apartment buildings. The study also considers additional changes proposed in conjunction with implementation of mandatory sprinklers under the National Building Code. The subject study provides a detailed statistical analysis and draws on a wide range of expert opinions to estimate levels of risk of loss of life, injury, and property damage before and after installation of sprinklers. The evaluation is based on incremental costs/savings for construction of all low- and high-rise apartment buildings constructed in a single year. The report presents the results from three analytical scenarios that take into account different estimates on risk, with added examination for alternative approaches to deal with property loss. Ce document se penche sur l'ampleur des avantages économiques que présente la faune du Canada. La partie A du rapport présente les grands paramètres servant à établir l'importance économique de la faune et examine les impacts économiques variés qui découlent des activités récréatives qu'elle suscite. La partie B établit l'importance d'une gamme plus étendue de ressources biologiques que celles considérées par l'Enquête dans le passé, en présentant les avantages économiques indirects des activités récréatives re-liées à la pêche et à la faune, à l'échelle du Canada et des provinces. La partie C traite du tourisme suscité par la pêche récréative et par la faune, du Canada vers les États-Unis et des États-Unis vers le Canada, et fournit des données nouvelles qui établissent l'impact des dépenses effectuées par les touristes américains dans l'économie canadienne. Finalement, la partie D présente diverses conclusions qui émergent du rapport et met de l'avant plusieurs implications stratégiques pour les politiques et programmes de développement durable, découlant de la conservation et de la protection des ressources biologiques. This report presents results on the economic significance of fish and wildlife, based on findings of a major survey conducted by Statistics Canada on behalf of federal and provincial conservation agencies. The report outlines the economic impacts (indirect benefits) for Canada and the provinces of the expenditures of Canadians on wildlife-related activities and recreational fishing, and of United States fish- and wildlife-based tourists in Canada. It also presents the net economic value (direct benefits) that accrues to participants in wildlife-related activities. Finally, the report discusses the significance of the survey findings for sustainable development programs and policies. CA CO CU ND NR SC

Improving administrative problem solving : an experimental practicum

To assess the extent to which school administrators' problem-solving abilities could be improved, a 4 day practicum using mainly co-operative learning techniques was conducted with 14 principals and 8 vice-principals; 10 principals and 6 vice-principals acted as controls. Pre- and post-test measures to test the effectiveness of the practicum were taken. Data collected during years 1 and 2 of the project were analyzed to determine if the results of the research with elementary school principals could be generalized to other contexts. Results describe the problem solving processes of effective secondary school principals, and the group problem solving processes of elementary school principals. In order to document the nature of typical problems encountered by principals during the school year, year 2 data were analyzed. ED ON OR PR SS

Indicators of social competence : student form

By Clay Laffleur. S.I. : The author, 1980. 19 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07019
MICROLOG 95-05294 (1 fiche)

The concept of competence used in this study is based on the work of White and Goldfried and D'Zurilla, and discusses their approach. The author points out that it was necessary to choose an approach that would be of particular relevance to the concept of social competence of high school students and also result in an operational definition. To prepare for this study the author spent 1 day each week for an entire school year (1975) in a metropolitan high school. Explains that later discussion about social development and schools (Laffleur, 1976) resulted in a system-wide project on group development and social behaviour (Wilson and Laffleur, 1977), and that as a result of these activities a more formal study was initiated. During 1977 discussions with individual and class groups of students in several metropolitan high schools were undertaken to have students describe the relevant social situations with which they must cope. As a result of these discussions, a large number of specific situational incidents were constructed. These were reviewed, analyzed and translated into items, with reference to the Goldfried and D'Zurilla operational definition and White's concept of competence. Finally, a 53-item Likert scale was produced, and further analyses resulted in the present form of the instrument that contains 29 items. (States that this form was developed for a large scale study of year 8 and 10 high school students in Adelaide, Australia in 1978 and 1979.) Includes student questionnaire and results.

Recently developed veneer slicing equipment and radio-frequency dryers may provide an opportunity for British Columbia manufacturers to produce thick veneers quickly and economically. This study investigated the potential of commercial slicing and radio-frequency drying technology for processing aspen and spruce into 6.5 and 8.5 millimeter thick veneer. The investigators compared radio-frequency and conventional drying and flitch conditioning in terms of their effects on drying times, product quality, and final moisture content distribution. This report presents the results of the study, including the technical feasibility of the processes used and the yield and quality of the veneers produced.

The author also conducted experiments on specimens of Pecten opercularis hung by a thread into water and discusses what these reveal about the balancing organs in Pecten and the biological function of the statocysts. The author concludes with remarks on the phylogenetic origin of the statocysts' asymmetry.

Indique que l'animation culturelle s'inscrit au nombre des initiatives lancées par le ministère, et que celui-ci lui accorde de l'importance. Se compose de 2 parties distinctes. La première porte sur les aspects théoriques et la seconde sur les aspects pratiques de l'animation culturelle par rapport à la culture, à la communauté franco-ontarienne et à l'école de langue française. Présente le but, les résultats généraux et spécifiques de l'animation culturelle, ainsi que la notion d'intervention sur laquelle repose l'action culturelle. Explique aussi comment le service d'animation culturelle ajoute à l'école une dimension nouvelle pour en faire en quelque sorte une entreprise culturelle. Expose les fondements de l'action culturelle en milieu scolaire, et discute de l'engagement de l'élève et de toutes les parties concernées par l'animation culturelle en milieu scolaire. La deuxième partie est consacrée aux réalisations culturelles de l'école franco-ontarienne. Propose des thèmes et des interventions ainsi qu'une liste de sujets de discussion et de recherche qui peuvent être exploités en animation culturelle. Analyse quelques interventions pour explorer les possibilités d'action culturelle. Comprend 15 annexes, tels que : le mandat des écoles franco-ontariennes et l'évaluation d'un plan d'action.

ISO 9000 and the residential construction industry : discussion paper

Prepared for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Science and Technology Sector, Industry Canada ; by Hussein Rostum. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Centre for Future Studies in Housing and Living Environments, 1994. vii, 75 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-05047 (1 fiche)

ISO 9000 is the international set of standards developed to assess the quality of management in any organization. Implementing ISO 9000 in the residential industry could provide assurance to purchasers of buildings or building materials that builders (or manufacturers of building materials) have in place the necessary procedures and quality checks to ensure such matters as consistency of performance and adherence to appropriate building or materials standards. In this sense, ISO could serve as a complement to building codes, warranty programs, and regulations requirements. This report reviews ISO 9000 and its importance around the world, and assesses the relevance of those standards to the Canadian residential construction industry. The report also describes the ISO 9000 implementation and registration process, notes the benefits of ISO 9000 in facing industry competition, and summarizes the role of government housing agencies in applying ISO 9000 to the benefit of the housing industry.

The Junior mathematics review set out to: collect information on the taught curriculum; identify the specific needs of the system; facilitate the implementation of the new mathematics curriculum; and prepare for a junior mathematics review in 1989. In its 1st phase, the review focused on the collection of information about the taught curriculum and the various strategies used in teaching. In the 2d phase, the focus was on the collection of information about the learned curriculum. The key question used to guide this phase was: how do students at each of the junior level grades perform on items representing the taught objectives in each of the 3 components: arithmetic, measurement, and geometry? Discusses the taught and learned curriculum and presents results of a questionnaire on teaching strategies. Includes tables and graphs.

This book provides a set of guidelines to assist managers of private firms, aid workers, and government policymakers in developing countries in the management of technology. It first presents examples of successful and unsuccessful uses of science and technology by private industry in the third world, and discusses the lessons learned from each example. The book then describes how technology is managed in the firm and presents the principles for structuring science and technology policy. The book concludes with key projects to consider for assisting an organization in profiting from technology, including a training and research center, a technology development corporation, a field advisory service, and a technology promotion council.

Kootenay Lake Timber Supply Area : rationale for AAC determination, effective June 1, 1995 until next determination within five years

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1995. 61 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 95-04702 (1 fiche)

The Kootenay Lake Timber Supply Area covers about 1.13 million hectares centered around Kootenay Lake, British Columbia. Effective June 1995, the annual allowable cut (AAC) for timber harvesting in the area will be 700,000 cubic meters. This document presents the reasons behind the determination of that AAC. It discusses the technical limitations of the information used in the determination and describes the guiding principles used in the determination, and considers factors affecting the accuracy of base-case timber supply forecasts. Such factors include the accuracy of existing timber inventories and volume estimates, the available land base contributing to the timber harvest, the extent of forest regeneration, and competing land uses.

Labour, the most widely used and valued input in Canadian production, is exchanged in a market best described as being in a constant state of flux. Recent estimates suggest that more than four million people secure employment each year, while a similar number become unemployed or leave the labour market. Conditions in this market throughout the last decade and the beginning of the 1990s were influenced by a number of factors, the chief of which include two major recessions, disproportionate growth in regional employment and an increase in the incidence of long-term unemployment. This paper looks at these and other developments in the labour market that have occurred since the beginning of the last decade.

Le principe de précaution, bien qu'il fasse l'objet de diverses interprétations et de plus d'une douzaine de définitions différentes dans des déclarations et des traités internationaux, devient rapidement un principe essentiel du droit international de l'environnement. Ce document analyse le principe de précaution, appelé par certains l'approche de précaution, à partir de cinq points de vue. À la section 1, nous verrons l'historique, la portée et l'éventail des définitions. Nous illustrons à la section 2, la mise en oeuvre du principe dans les systèmes juridiques nationaux. À la section 3, nous analysons le rapport étroit entre le principe de précaution et les autres principes du développement durable, particulièrement la prévention de la pollution, l'équité entre générations et la participation du public. La section 4 porte sur les rapports entre le principe de précaution et la science et la recherche scientifique. À la section 5, nous préconisons des options juridiques pour l'intégration du principe de précaution à la LCPE, par exemple, au moyen d'une déclaration au préambule ou par son intégration spécifique aux parties importantes.

Argues that the learning essential to cognitive development is most likely to occur when students engage in activities in which it is necessary to recognize and solve problems of increasing levels of difficulty. States that, in order to tackle a problem, one must be able to represent it to oneself in a way that allows one to generate and choose between alternative means to its solution, and then carry out the procedures one has judged likely to be effective. Emphasizes that insofar as reading or listening involves an active construing and interpreting of the text, it is appropriate to assimilate them to a problem-solving model which is clearly suitable for the vast majority of activities in which children engage both in and out of school. Stresses that the major role of interaction in learning is to provide the means through which the teacher can, through collaborative talking, enable students to learn from engaging in activities that pose problems to be solved. Discusses the characteristics of collaborative talk. Gives 4 examples of choices and connections in a collaborative talk in a combined 3d and 4th grade classroom in an inner city school in Toronto.

Water crossings are a significant component of access road construction and maintenance costs. Design of such crossings takes into account predicted streamflows during extreme conditions. If culverts are used, much of the culvert capacity is not used during most of the life span of the crossing. Low water crossings are believed to be an environmentally sound alternative for low volume roads, as they are designed to allow periodic flooding over the road under extreme streamflow conditions. This report describes the installation of a low water crossing in northern Ontario. The type of crossing is known as a vented ford, consisting of a dip in the road with small culverts to handle normal flow, a roadbed and fill designed to resist erosion and to act as a spillway under extreme flooding, and precast barrier walls on the downstream side of the roadway.

On October 4, 1992, the small yarding tug Signal No. 1 was push-towing a barge carrying vehicles and passengers in a voyage of some 22 hours' duration along Williston Lake, British Columbia. At about 0145 hours when the barge was off Scott Creek, a passenger was lost overboard from the barge. The search for the passenger was hindered by sea state and darkness. This report details the factual information related to the incident and analyzes the factors affecting passenger and crew safety and the causes of the victim falling overboard. The report then outlines safety actions taken in light of the findings of the analysis.

L'objectif de ce projet de recherche était de mieux comprendre la façon dont les propriétaires-occupants décident de faire des travaux de rénovation dans leur maison. La partie principale de cette étude, qui porte sur les prises de décisions des consommateurs, est centrée sur les aspects de la rénovation touchant la longévité structurelle des logements, la salubrité du milieu de vie et la performance à long terme de l'habitation. Étant donné le peu de renseignements disponibles sur le fonctionnement du secteur de la rénovation, ce projet de recherche a été organisé en deux étapes. La première, l'étape statistique, examinait la façon dont ce secteur fonctionne sur le plan économique et commercialisation. C'est à partir de cette analyse qu'a été réalisée la deuxième étape, celle des recherches qualitatives auprès des consommateurs du marché de la rénovation. Ce rapport présente les résultats des deux étapes de cette étude.

This study examined the association between commercial motor vehicle drivers' medical conditions and crash severity. The total number of victims was used as an indication of the severity of a crash. The investigators studied crashes of truck and bus drivers for which medical information was available, using nonlinear regression models incorporating information on driver characteristics, crash circumstances, and health status. This report presents the study results, which identified two types of health problems that had a significant effect on crash severity. The report also notes the significance of variables describing crash circumstances.

Plusieurs cas particuliers plus simples de ce modèle, notamment qu-

Nous faisons une revue des méthodes de relaxation et de décomposition, des techniques basées sur la connaissance de l'enveloppe convexe de l'ensemble des solutions (propriétés polyédrales) et nous étudions également les algorithmes conçus pour des environnements parallèles.

The Alberta Multiculturalism Commission commissioned a study in 1992 to determine whether Alberta organizations are becoming concerned about diversity in the workplace, and to gather information for the development of an information resource bank of corporate initiatives. The study methodology included questionnaires sent to Alberta companies and interviews with company representatives. This report presents the findings of the study, including the extent to which the surveyed companies implemented diversity-related initiatives and the kinds of initiatives implemented in the areas of recruitment, training, employee retention, company organization and structure, communication, and community relations.

This document is designed to provide municipalities with information and practical guidance on how they may contribute to effective implementation in Canada of agreements reached at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The document provides a background to that conference and highlights each conference product that is most relevant to Canadian municipalities. It then explores the range of municipal actions which can be taken to implement the conference recommendations and includes municipal case studies to illustrate how these actions may be pursued in practice. A matrix is provided as a simple tool for preliminary determination of what activities are already under way and to assist in determining subsequent steps. An appendix outlines a method of developing a local government strategy for sustainable development through the use of strategic planning.

A natural environment system strategy for the Ottawa-Carleton region will consist of a network of linked natural areas and related policies for protection and land management. The first stage of this strategy, as described in this report, involves the creation of a regional-scale database whose objective is to create a consistent means of describing elements in the region's natural environment. The report describes the data layer selection, including classifications for vegetative cover and aquatic habitat; the derivation of ecological units for the database; and an ecological profile of the region, including its major ecological units and their functional relationships. Finally, the report outlines the next steps in the strategy, such as development of criteria for identifying natural areas to be included in the natural environment system. Appendices give additional detail on data description and on

Natural gas-fired cogeneration study : staff discussion paper, BC cogeneration to serve the US power market : competitiveness study and cost benefit analysis

After a general introduction to cogeneration, this study estimates the cost components of a hypothetical 100-megawatt gas-fired cogeneration facility for each of five regions (three in British Columbia and two in the state of Washington). The objective of this financial analysis is to demonstrate the relative competitiveness of siting cogeneration in Washington versus British Columbia from the perspective of a cogeneration project proponent. The financial analysis assumes that the facility's load factor is 92.5%, that the gas is sourced in northeastern British Columbia, and that all power is delivered to the Seattle region of Washington. The cost-benefit analysis calculates the incremental benefits and costs of a British Columbia cogeneration facility relative to the next-best alternative use of the province's gas resources.

Cogeneration is an efficient way of using the combustion of a fuel to produce useful thermal energy, mechanical work, and electricity. The economics of cogeneration are competitive with conventional power generating technologies. This assessment of Saskatchewan's cogeneration potential makes a number of assumptions about the fuel requirements and efficiencies of typical cogeneration technologies, including natural gas or woodwaste fueling and 80-90% efficiency of the heat recovery steam generator. This report considers two cogeneration options: upgrading existing boilers to high pressure applications and addition of a steam turbine generator; and introduction of a gas turbine with waste heat recovery. The report presents results by industry sector and makes observations about such issues as gas capacity, economics of cogeneration versus life extension of existing facilities, load matching, and the potential for carbon dioxide emissions reduction.

The objective of this study was to determine whether balsam fir stands, thinned to different levels of basal area, differ in their susceptibility and vulnerability to damage created by infestations of spruce budworm. In 1976-77, the investigators thinned two relatively pure, juvenile, second-growth balsam fir stands in northwestern Ontario to four levels of basal area by girdling or felling. The stands were assessed in 1988. Annual aerial and ground monitoring of the study sites indicated that one area experienced a moderate to severe defoliation by spruce budworm during 1984-86, while the other area experienced moderate to severe defoliation by budworm during 1980-86. This report presents re-

The purpose of this paper is to illustrate how the attributes of woodland caribou range, particularly winter habitat, can be described by the Northwestern Ontario Forest Ecosystem Classification (NWO FEC). Improved range description methodology that integrates the NWO FEC with other land-resource databases will enhance the ability of forest managers to decide where to manage for woodland caribou instead of moose. Using data from park or district field surveys and other commonly available land-resource databases, the investigators characterized caribou range in three northwestern Ontario provincial parks and forests in terms of the NWO FEC. The paper describes the results of the characterization and the ability of the NWO FEC to describe woodland caribou range features. It also discusses the implications of the study for caribou management and the ecological implications of site factors. LS ON PR SC

In 1994, the Nova Scotia Minister of Education announced that a new campus of the Nova Scotia Community College would be developed on the site of the teachers' college in Truro. The programming focus for the new campus would be on business technology, entrepreneurship, community economic development, and applied and creative arts. This report presents the findings of consultations with the public, universities, and businesses regarding the programming at the new campus. Issues raised at the consultations included the need for innovation in programming, the use of modern technologies, the role of partnerships with universities and business, and access to the aboriginal and black communities. The report makes recommendations on programming, strategic partnerships, and use of the physical plant. Appendices contain supporting documentation, technical data, and five volumes of bibliographic surveys on community colleges and their programs.

O.E.R.C presentation : critical issues for rural students in transition to secondary school

By Mary-Ellen Walsh. Huron Park, ON : The author, 1995. 13 p. ONTERIS ON07415
MICROLOG 95-05282 (1 fiche)

Examines the transition from elementary to secondary school for rural students within the political context of recently mandated changes to education in the transition years in Ontario. Explains that legislation to 'destream' grade 9, and the introduction of a common curriculum at the transition level have provoked a mixed reaction from teachers, parents and students, particularly in rural areas where many perceive the changes as responding more to the needs of students in culturally diverse urban areas. States that rather than examine school culture as a way to investigate student experience and attitudes toward change, it is better to examine particular contextual factors influencing schools, such as school structure, size, and teacher experience. Explains that as the study progressed, the focus of interpretation shifted from school culture analysis to focus on the relationship between context, school culture, and participants' views of rural transition and the need for change. Explores also the connection between context, perspectives on change, and teacher purpose. Conducts a case study in rural southern Ontario involving a small-town secondary school and 1 of its elementary feeder schools, located 12 kilometres outside of the town. Data was collected through interviews, and classroom observations. Lists references.

Industrialized countries have historically committed themselves to an expansionist ethos based on the assumption that the planet's resources were essentially limitless. The 20th century has seen the breakdown of this assumption. This book first gives a historical overview of the industrialized world's (and therefore Canada's) commitment to the expansionist ethos. It then examines the way in which the term 'sustainable development' is used to support both a dominant expansionist world view and an emerging ecological world view. The book criticizes Canada's commitment to the expansionist position, using the forestry and agriculture sectors as examples of the need to rethink economic and environmental policies. Finally, the book makes recommendations for a strategy of resource usage based on a systemic approach to Canada's social, economic, and biophysical domains and that is committed to comprehensive environmental sustainability.

In 1918, T. Baranov determined the relationship between the number of individual fish in a group and their body length, when the group size decreases solely according to natural mortality. This paper examines what happens if Baranov's hypothesis is changed to reflect the thinking that body length reaches a maximum along a logarithmic curve. The author tests the alternative hypothesis using statistics collected from commercial herring fisheries.

This paper presents a parallel branch-and-bound algorithm for solving the multicommodity uncapacitated location problem with balancing requirements, that is based on the best known sequential method for solving the problem. The algorithm aims to exploit parallelism by dividing the search tree among processes and by performing operations on several subproblems simultaneously. The asynchronous algorithm thus obtained incorporates a filtering coordinator process to balance the workload, as well as an adjustable synchronous initialization phase. Experimental results on networks of transputers and distributed workstations are reported and analyzed.

On trouvera dans ce document certaines suggestions quant à la façon d'aider leurs enfants à vivre la séparation et le divorce. Cette brochure comporte quatre sections : dans la section I, on décrit certaines des émotions et des situations auxquelles ils pourraient être confrontés au cours du processus de la séparation et du divorce. La section II donne un aperçu des problèmes rencontrés par les enfants de tous âges au cours de la séparation et du divorce, et propose des moyens d'aider les enfants à s'adapter à la situation. Cette voie nouvelle sur laquelle s'engagent parents et enfants est semée d'embûches, mais également riche de possibilités. Des liens sont rompus, d'autres se nouent. Tel est l'objet de la section III. Enfin, la section IV indique comment et où les parents doivent s'adresser pour obtenir le soutien, l'assistance et les renseignements dont ils ont besoin.

Photo interpretations of the NWO FEC vegetation and soil types for the Aulneau Peninsula, northwestern Ontario

G.M. Wickware & Associates. Thunder Bay, ON : Ministry of Natural Resources, Northwestern Ontario Forest Technology Development Unit, 1989. IV, 15 p. : ill., Bibl. (NWOFTDU technical report / Ontario. Northwestern Ontario Forest Technology Development Unit ; no. 54) MICROLOG 95-05155 (1 fiche)

The Northwestern Ontario Forest Ecosystem Classification (NWO FEC) provides a framework that forest managers can use for classifying forest soils and vegetation (S-Types and V-Types) and for land management applications. For many forest management uses, NWO FEC V- or S-type information must be mapped at a scale compatible with data collection by ground survey. However, ground surveys are typically costly or difficult, and a photointerpretation procedure for typing soils or vegetation would be useful. This study was undertaken to develop a reliable methodology for interpreting NWO FEC S- and V- types using aerial photos. The study area was the Aulneau Peninsula along the Lake of the Woods, and study methods included a review of existing information, a field reconnaissance, and development of photointerpretation keys. This report presents the study results and the interpretation procedure developed, photos together with other available information. ### Planning for industrial restructuring in Japan : the case of the Chukyo region

By David W. Edgington. Vancouver, BC : University of British Columbia, Centre for Human Settlements ; School of Community and Regional Planning, 1992. 86 p. : Maps, Bibl. (Policy issues and planning responses / University of British Columbia. The Chukyo region of Japan lies between Tokyo and Osaka and is the central industrial region of the country. Various pressures make upgrading of the Chukyo economic framework a national and local prerequisite. This study outlines the in-place or planned initiatives to help Chukyo realize its goal of becoming Japan's industrial and applied technology capital. The study first describes the Chukyo region and its economic development, and outlines the economic challenges faced by the region. It then describes the region's economic planning framework, including government programs and policies affecting its economy. Other sections of the study document local plans and initiatives to upgrade technology and infrastructure, target industries for further development, and diversify the economy. The study ends by assessing the implications for Chukyo of current economic changes in Japan, the likelihood of success of Chukyo's plans, and the lessons applicable to other Pacific industrial regions. The purpose of this report is to explore and clarify the complexities of evidence law as it relates to police investigations of family violence against persons with disabilities. Based on a review of legal and social science texts, this report describes the social status of persons with disabilities, examines the rules defining the rights of witnesses with a disability, and sets out the resulting implications for police investigation. It also reviews laws and reform recommendations in several jurisdictions relating to the evidence of witnesses with a disability.

Cette étude examine plusieurs aspects de la réaction de la police dans les cas d'exploitation de personnes âgées dans les collectivités multiculturelles. Elle se propose d'établir les bases d'une recherche plus approfondie dans un domaine où les données semblent limitées, particulièrement au Canada. Elle traite du problème complexe de la violence à l'endroit des personnes âgées dans la perspective de la violence familiale et porte une attention particulière aux différences culturelles et à la manière dont les services de police pourraient en tenir compte. L'étude a été entreprise à la suite de la décision récente du gouvernement canadien de mettre un frein à la violence familiale.

The research reported in this document was designed to assess the usefulness and implications of the concept of 'youth at risk' for criminal justice and community-based policy and programs. The research also directed attention at the potential for interagency collaboration in addressing the problem of youth at risk and the role that police might play in such an initiative. The information in this report comes from three primary sources: a review of criminal justice literature, site visits to selected locations, and interviews with professionals in educational, social service, and police agencies that deal with the issue of youth at risk. Each of the research components focused on the concept of youth at risk in terms of how 'youth' and 'at risk' were understood and applied in the context of service delivery, programming, and policy development.

This project explores several elements of a police response to senior abuse within a multicultural context. It attempts to lay a foundation for further research where data, particularly in Canada, appears sparse. The study grapples with the complex problem of senior abuse within a framework of family violence, paying particular attention to cultural sensitivities and how these might be accommodated by the police. The impetus for such a study came from the Canadian government's continuing efforts to combat the serious problem of family violence.

Cette note de service énonce les exigences minimales que la politique des conseils scolaires ou des sections devra contenir en ce qui concerne la composition et le fonctionnement des conseils d'école (l'établissement d'un conseil d'école devra commencer en septembre 1995 et avoir été établi en juin 1996). Brunswick Mining and Smelting produces about 200,000 tonnes of phosphogypsum annually as a waste product from fertilizer manufacture. This waste is discarded via marine dumping, and alternative disposal methods are needed in order to allay environmental concerns. One such method may be chemical reclamation. This report describes a laboratory study conducted to investigate the potential of phosphogypsum in the manufacture of fertilizer-grade potassium sulfate, with calcium chloride as a byproduct. The laboratory program consisted of experiments to test the extent of the reaction between the waste material and standard commercial grade potash in aqueous ammonia. The ammonia was used to depress the solubility of the potassium sulfate product as it formed and to inhibit formation of the double salt syngenite. AP EV NR PR PS SC

This study examines the quality and coverage of archaeological surveys in British Columbia and the feasibility of incorporating existing data into predictive models. It identifies areas requiring additional surveys and discusses appropriate scales, sampling strategies, and environmental parameters for potential mapping. The study also determines a preferred methodology for archaeological inventorying and selects and area and techniques for testing the preferred methodology. The study methodology involved a detailed examination of all 21 probabilistic surveys conducted in the province, and summary tables of their methods and results are included. This paper examines free trade from the perspective of ecological economics in terms of its implications for global carrying capacity. The paper uses an approach based on ecological footprint analysis to compare the scale of the economy with available natural capital stocks. This approach reveals the ecological and ethical outcomes of trade that are generally invisible to conventional monetary analyses. The paper estimates the amount of productive natural capital needed to sustain the present human enterprise and compares anticipated needs to available stocks of natural capital. It discusses international trade as a means of circumventing the ecologic-economic balance, of distancing people physically and psychologically from the ecosystems that support them, of exporting ecological degradation, and of appropriating carrying capacity of one region by another. The paper ends with a speculation on the form that an ecologically sound development model might take. BC CO EV EX PR SS

Le problème de la violence familiale au Canada constitue l'un des principaux défis qui se pose au système de justice pénale. La police doit être consciente des attentes croissantes du public dans la lutte contre la violence familiale. Il est d'une importance capitale que l'action des agents de police dans ce domaine soit appropriée et efficace. Pour ce faire, les policiers doivent recevoir la formation pertinente, et les cadres de la police doivent posséder les compétences de gestion nécessaires. Ce document résume les conclusions d'un atelier qui s'est déroulé au Collège canadien de la police en juin 1993. ### Problèmes stochastiques de tournées de véhicules : un pas de plus vers le réalisme

Dans ce texte, nous définissons et étudions le problème de tournées de véhicules avec clients et demandes stochastiques. L'objectif de ce problème est de déterminer une solution, avant même de connaître les réalisations des différents éléments stochastiques, de façon à minimiser l'espérance d'une certaine fonction de coût, fonction qui dépend évidemment des éléments stochastiques; c'est ce que l'on appelle l'optimisation a priori. Nous donnons une formulation de programmation stochastique en nombres entiers avec recours et nous proposons un algorithme exact basé sur une procédure de branchement avec génération de coupes ainsi qu'une heuristique basée sur une procédure de recherche avec tabous. Des résultats numériques sont présentés.

On y a inclus de brèves descriptions des organismes à l'annexe A, à la fin du document, afin de compléter les renseignements recueillis sur le fonctionnement des différents secteurs du système de services à la jeunesse. On examine également le fonctionnement d'ensemble du système. On résume l'expérience d'un quartier qui a réussi à prendre en main la situation de ses jeunes. Ensuite, on expose le point de vue des jeunes tant sur les caractéristiques de la population des fugueurs et des jeunes de la rue que sur le fonctionnement du système de services à la jeunesse. On présente par la suite une description détaillée des stratégies de collecte et d'analyse des données employées pour cerner le point de vue des jeunes et les tableaux découlant de l'analyse. Certaines questions générales sont ensuite examinées et on envisage diverses possibilités en ce qui concerne l'action communautaire future. Finalement, on traite des diverses implications politiques découlant du projet.

La propagande incitant à la haine et préconisant l'inégalité raciale a probablement toujours existé; toutefois, les trente dernières années ont été le témoin d'un débat généralisé sur ce qu'il convient de faire à ce sujet, si tant est qu'on y puisse quelque chose. Cette discussion met plus directement que jamais en conflit les valeurs sociales généralement acceptées au Canada que sont le multiculturalisme et l'égalitarisme, d'une part, et la liberté d'expression, d'autre part.

Rationalizing the management regime for the environment : purpose, objectives and principles

Winnipeg : Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment, 1994. 9 p. MICROLOG 95-04756 (1 fiche)

The Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment established a task group to define and develop a process leading to a management framework for Canada's environment. The harmonization and restructuring of the Canadian environmental management regime is a top priority of the group, given current concerns about the need to eliminate duplication and overlap in regulatory matters among the different levels of government. This document presents the consensus of the task group regarding the purpose and objectives of the new management framework. It also lists the principles that will be used to help develop the framework and to ensure that the objectives are met.

Recapturing of unearned increments, land taxes and betterment levies

By Mohammad Qadeer and Andrejs Skaburskis. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, 1994. xvii, 217 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 95-04892 (3 fiche)

This report reviews theories of recapturing gains in land values and analyzes the experiences of Canada, Britain, Australia, and the United States in implementing these measures. Recapture measures can take four basic forms: site and land taxes, development cost charges, betterment levies, and tenurial rearrangements such as land readjustments. The analysis examines whether specific conditions in a particular situation have more bearing on the outcome of a recapture measure than what is expected on the basis of conceptual arguments. The report also makes suggestions regarding the effective use of instruments to recapture increments in land values and recovering public investments.

Explique que ce rapport décrit la stratégie du Programme de reconnaissance des acquis (PRA) s'appliquant à la première phase de 3 ans qui commença en janvier 1993, et qu'il approfondit les discussions et arguments énoncés dans le document de travail. Explique que la reconnaissance des acquis part du principe que beaucoup d'adultes acquièrent des connaissances et des compétences par l'expérience professionnelle, par le biais d'activités communautaires, et faisant du bénévolat, en suivant des cours non collégiaux ou en faisant des études indépendantes. Le PRA permet d'évaluer les acquis et d'en faire le lien avec les cours et les programmes dispensés dans les établissements d'enseignement traditionnels. Grâce au PRA, les candidats adultes qui peuvent prouver qu'ils ont atteint les objectifs d'un cours donné et fournir des pièces justificatives, peuvent d'obtenir des crédits collégiaux officiels. Discute des méthodes d'évaluation des acquis, des questions portant sur les politiques collégiales, de la structure organisationnelle, et des considérations financières. Les annexes offrent une liste des membres du Comité consultatif du PRA, ses projets pilotes, les consultations, les sigles, et un sommaire des recommandations.

A new encapsulation technique developed by Dupont Inc. has shown promise for improving seed use efficiency and seedling survival in the direct seeding of forest lands. Dupont's so-called Tree Eggs consist of a blend of polymers, dried and pressed into a two-gram egg-shaped pellet into which the desired seed is embedded. When watered, the egg forms a protective gel or matrix around the seed, protecting it from drying and predation. This note summarizes second-year results of a trial comparing the use of Tree Eggs with Cercon shelter cones for regenerating jack pine and black spruce from seed at a site north of Thunder Bay, Ontario.

This report presents results of an inquiry into allegations of sexual abuse, and the lack of response by the relevant authorities to such allegations, at the New Brunswick Training School at Kingsclear. The inquiry originated from a 1985 incident in which a correctional officer counsellor at the school witnessed what he considered as an inappropriate sexual overture to a boy by a co-worker. The report describes the school, its staff and residents, and the history of the response to the incident by the school, law enforcement authorities, and provincial officials. It also examines the relationship between the provincial ombudsman's office and the school, details conclusions regarding the inquiry's terms of reference, and makes recommendations to improve operations at the school and prevent abuse.

This report examines administrative tribunals that resolve disputes arising in the work place in Ontario as a context within which to consider more general issues relating to the reform of administrative law. In particular, the report examines the substantial length of time absorbed by dispute resolution processes in seven statutory contexts. The report then considers two possible methods of reducing the time absorbed by these processes: a modification of the internal procedures of each tribunal and an elimination of the phenomenon of multiple proceedings arising from a single dispute. Finally, the report makes recommendations regarding modifications to tribunal practice and procedure, training of adjudicators, and compensation principles.

Since 1986, pensions have been included in the definition of family property in Ontario and have been subject to the equalization process in the Family Law Act. According to this Act, couples whose marriages dissolve must share the value of family property, including pensions. Current law is unsettled with regard to the appropriate methods of valuing pension benefits, and a complicated and unsatisfactory pension division process has resulted. This report makes recommendations for reform of the law relating to the division of pensions on marriage breakdown. It presents guidelines for valuation of pensions for equalization purposes under the Family Law Act; proposes creation of two additional settlement options where one of the family assets is a pension; and considers the status of agreements and orders under the Pension Benefits Act as well as the division of Canada Pension Plan benefits.

This paper describes the reproductive process in the snow crab, an important commercial species in the Far East. The authors conducted studies at the cellular, organic, organismic, and population levels, taking into account the ecological factors of the crab's habitat. The authors subjected crabs of different size groups to histological analysis, studied the spawning process and the productivity of gametogenesis in crabs of different age groups, and studied the distribution of larvae, young, and adult crabs during expeditions to the Bering Sea, Sea of Okhotsk, and Sea of Japan. They also discuss the spatial distribution of the snow crab in the north Pacific and the factors that determine the boundaries of that distribution.

Prevention of acid rock drainage (ARD) is probably the single most important environmental issue facing mines in Canada. Indian and Northern Affairs Canada commissioned this research plan to ensure that ARD prevention, control, and treatment technologies are developed for mines operating in northern Canada. The plan design is based on division of the Yukon and Northwest Territories into distinct subregions primarily based on geological features, extent of surficial deposits, degree of permafrost formation, and annual precipitation and evaporation patterns. The plan identifies several high-priority areas for ARD research, and identifies research themes based on the specific ARD management opportunities and constraints in those areas. The plan also presents research project outlines, schedule, and budget requirements. An appendix includes research project outlines.

Cependant, peu d'hôpitaux ont encadré la réutilisation des cathéters par une politique et des procédures formelles afin d'assurer la sécurité et l'efficacité des interventions faites avec des cathéters réutilisés. Ce document se penche précisément sur ce sujet et examine les risques associés à la réutilisation des cathéters jetables.

The review critiques each publication from the housing sector perspective, with a special emphasis on soils in urban centers. For each document, the review summarizes the rationale for the criteria, identifies the relative strengths of the arguments involved, and identifies limitations of the criteria such as scope, errors of omission, and simplifying assumptions. The review then assesses the criteria from the soil cleanup perspective, including their flexibility to deal with different building forms and systems and the predictability of costs and work required for compliance. Finally, the review compares derivation methods contained in the two publications.

Such transformation is coming about because of such factors as the growing number of women retirees, changing economic conditions, types of jobs being created, involuntary or early retirement, and restrained government spending. The book examines changes in the transition to retirement along three dimensions: the timing of retirement, and specifically the trend toward retirement at younger ages; the process of retirement, sometimes preceded by a period of unemployment or non-standard employment; and the financing of retirement, including the sources of income and the distribution of income among retiree groups.

This paper describes an improved method for the routine determination of diarrhetic shellfish toxins, which can cause poisoning symptoms in humans and which have been shown to be potent tumor promoters. Okadaic acid and dinophys toxin-1 (DTX-1) are the most common of those toxins, and in addition to representing a serious threat to health, they pose a significant economic hardship to the shellfish industry since shellfish harvesting is banned during the intoxication period. The improved method for detecting those two toxins is based on high pressure liquid chromatography fluorescence in which the toxins are extracted into methanol, partitioned, reacted with a reagent, and chromatographed. The paper also describes results of analyses of shellfish samples spiked with the toxins, showing the performance of the improved method.

La Loi Canadienne sur la protection de l'environnement renferme des dispositions prévoyant la révision obligatoire, par le Parlement, de la Loi et de ses modalités d'application au bout de cinq ans. Cette révision offre l'occasion d'examiner un large éventail de solutions possibles en matière d'exécution de la loi, y compris le recours à des sanctions administratives pécuniaires. Ce document traite de quatre modèles possibles d'organismes judiciaires indépendants devant lesquels le contrevenant pourrait interjeter appel : les cours criminelles provinciales; la Cour fédérale; un tribunal administratif permanent; et, un tribunal administratif ad hoc. Il renferme également un exemple des coûts possibles de chacun des modèles.

Etre sans abri, c'est ne pas avoir de toit au-dessus de la tête, mais c'est aussi beaucoup plus. L'absence de logis coupe l'individu du reste de la société, l'empêche de jouer un rôle dans la collectivité et lui nie toute vie privée et toute sécurité. Ce document se penche sur les sans-abri au Canada. Il aborde principalement la définition des sans-abri; le dénombrement des sans-abri; la composition de la population de sans-abri; la pénurie de logements abordables; les solutions au problème des sans-abri; et, les mesures parlementaires.

The postclosure assessment of AECL Research's nuclear fuel waste burial concept focuses on the effects on human health and the environment due to potential contaminant releases into the biosphere after the disposal vault in the rock of the Canadian Shield is closed. This report documents a systematic procedure for scenario analysis developed for the postclosure assessment and then applied to the study of a hypothetical disposal system. The scenario analysis identifies factors that could affect the performance of the disposal system and groups these factors into scenarios for detailed quantitative evaluation. The application also identifies a number of other factors and potential scenarios that would not contribute significantly to environmental and safety impacts for the hypothetical disposal system.

Tax incentives alter the after-tax cost of research and development (RD) investments. RD expenditures entitle those making them to tax deductions and credits, which lower the net cost of RD. Those deductions and credits in turn represent a tax expenditure, or opportunity cost for the government. Tax expenditures may thus serve as a substitute for budget expenditures or as a complement to direct financing methods but they are much more difficult to evaluate and control. This paper examines the basis for government intervention in this area and gives a historical overview of tax incentives for industrial RD. It also includes some comments on the advantages and disadvantages of tax incentives for scientific research.

Presents 3 case studies based on work with 3 science teachers from the same school. The case studies focus on the decisions each of these teachers made in the process of translating the received, official science curriculum into classroom practice. All the case studies deal with one particular science class during the course of a single year. It is a slice of academic life in the careers of both the teachers and the students involved. The methodology employed in each case study involved 6 steps: collect data by observing the classroom activities, talking with the teacher and entering the information as field notes for later analysis; analyze data and prepare an interpretative account of observations and discussions for the teacher; interview the teacher using the interpretative account as stimulus for discussion; analyze the sum total of data for preparation of the case study; send the case study to the teacher for a response; and take into account the teachers' response in final editing of the case study. Appendices include teacher and student questionnaires.

Selection thinning is the harvesting of dominant trees of commercial interest in an immature forest stand. Its purpose is to encourage diameter growth in the remaining stems and improve their shape. This paper describes a study conducted to evaluate the performance of a tractor-mounted agricultural winch in selection thinning. A farm tractor fitted with a Norse 5000 winch was used to haul long-length logs to the roadside. Project activities included construction of access trails and stacking areas, marking timber, skidding of trees, and bucking hardwood and softwood logs into various lengths to optimize yield. The results indicate the appropriateness of the relatively inexpensive winch for private woodlot operations.

States that researchers have used children's self-reports to investigate the conditions under which children seek and give help, but that little attention has been given to examining the predictive validity of such measures, although investigators in other domains have found discrepancies between self-reports and observed behaviour. In this study, observations of grade 9-10 students working in cooperative learning groups were compared to self-reported intentions to ask for and give help to peers. The self-reports were poor predictors. The weak ability of students to anticipate their behaviour was attributed to uncertainty about their competence on the task which they were attempting to complete when the observations were made. Includes tables with adjusted mean frequencies of occurrences (and standard deviations) for observed help seeking and help giving by treatment, and correlations of observed help giving. ### Senior drivers in Saskatchewan

Both the representation of the seniors on Saskatchewan roadways and the dependency of seniors on personal vehicle travel are expected to increase into the first decades of the next century. Since increased age is associated with a deterioration in the skills needed to drive, there is concern about the effects of an aging driver population in the province. This paper begins with a review of the demographic changes, mobility needs, and characteristics of older drivers' exposure to driving risk as a background to understanding the magnitude of the senior driver problem in Saskatchewan and potential countermeasures. The paper then examines older driver performance in Saskatchewan and identifies problem areas by assessing records of older drivers' crash, conviction, and insurance fund claims for 1986-88. The paper concludes with a review of potential areas of senior driver skill impairment and an assessment of countermeasure options, focusing on those applicable in Saskatchewan.

Le chapitre II résume les constatations de la recherche relative à l'évaluation. Ces constatations proviennent de plusieurs sources : une enquête auprès des personnes qui payent un soutien aux enfants et au conjoint et de celles qui le reçoivent; les données compilées par les agents d'exécution sur les cas dont ils ont la charge; les entrevues avec le personnel des tribunaux et du ministère de l'Aide au revenu et une analyse des diverses statistiques compilées par les ministères de la Justice et de l'Aide au revenu. La première partie du chapitre III s'inspire de toutes ces données et des observations générales des personnes chargées de l'évaluation ainsi que de l'examen des dossiers administratifs et financiers pour juger de la réussite du programme et de la réalisation des objectifs. La seconde partie du chapitre III expose et commente plusieurs recommandations dont la mise en œuvre devrait, selon leurs tenants, accroître l'efficacité du programme et répondre plus adéquatement aux préoccupations et aux besoins déterminés par le personnel ainsi que par les clients du programme.

Explores the phenomenon of 'shattered images' in the learning to teach process. Focuses on field experience components of preservice teacher preparation to consider the general question: how can we better assist preservice teachers in their preparation for field experiences? Draws on: reflective accounts of preservice teachers written prior to, during, and following periods of field experience; experiences of teachers and teacher educators; and research on teacher education and development, with a focus on field experience. Highlights and examines some of the discrepancies between preservice teachers' expectations and experiences. Identifies and discusses circumstances contributing to the discrepancies, and considers ways in which such inconsistencies might be taken into account, in order to develop and maintain productive preservice teacher preparation programs.

The plastic seed shelter cone is used in direct seeding operations for regeneration of forest sites. The forestry worker prepares the seeding site, empties the cone, and deposits seeds of the desired species inside the cone, which acts as a mini-greenhouse that creates conditions conducive to seed germination and growth. The cone also protects the seeds against freezing and animals, and usually biodegrades within two years. This paper describes procedures for using shelter cones for seeding black spruce and jack pine at suitable sites in northwestern Ontario. It includes suggestions on seeding site selection, cone placement, seeding, and appropriate equipment.

Le but de ce rapport est de faire la lumière sur l'état du logement au Canada et d'analyser les tendances du secteur de l'habitation, en vue de répondre à une question fondamentale : les Canadiens sont-ils bien logés? Dans le cadre de l'étude, on examine aussi plusieurs questions connexes : quels changements sont survenus dans le parc de logements et dans sa capacité de contribuer à la satisfaction des résidents et à la qualité de vie; comment la nature de la demande de logements a-t-elle évolué ces dernières années; comment a évolué la capacité des Canadiens de se payer un logement convenable et d'accéder à la propriété; et, qu'est-ce que les tendances et les circonstances actuelles laissent prévoir pour l'avenir?

This paper responds to the Standing Committee's report, and looks at the concerns that small business and others have identified. It highlights recent federal government initiatives, including those outlined in Building a more innovative economy, and the other jobs and growth agenda papers last fall. It also acknowledges actions taken by stakeholders outside government to address those concerns and sets out directions for further cooperation in the future. Reflecting the current fiscal situation and small business recommendations to address priorities within current resources, the federal initiatives outlined in this document are all being funded through existing budgets or through reallocation of resources.

The objective of this study was to determine the impact of aerial glyphosate application for conifer release on vegetative composition, moose winter utilization, and fall small mammal utilization over a three-year post-spray period at an Ontario boreal forest site. The investigators compared treated (sprayed) and non-treated areas to determine differences due to the glyphosate herbicide treatment. This paper presents the results of small mammal and vegetation response at the study areas, one to three years after treatment. The paper also discusses variations in observed small-mammal populations in relation to changes in vegetation due to herbicide treatment.

The mobile TAGA 6000 air pollution monitoring unit conducted a five-phase ambient polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) monitoring survey in Smithville, Ontario. The survey objective was to provide on-site ambient concentration measurements of selected PCBs in the vicinity of the Smithville PCB disposal site during different phases of the site cleanup operation. The mobile unit screened air samples for ambient PCBs every two minutes, analyzing over 3,500 air samples for PCB congeners during the cleanup process. This report presents results of the monitoring survey for all phases of the cleanup, including periods before, during, and after utilization of the PCB incinerator. Appendices provide information on the incinerator and the PCB sampling and analysis equipment and techniques.

The Poundmaker feedlot/ethanol complex is located near Lanigan, Saskatchewan. Its origins date from the mid-1970s when a group of local farmers established a feedmill/feedlot complex. This complex expanded in the 1980s and an ethanol plant was added in 1991 to complement the existing operation. The complex provides jobs and contributes significantly to the economy of Lanigan and environs. This report analyzes the socio-economic impacts of the complex on farms and rural communities within 60 kilometers of Lanigan. It describes the economy of the area, local agricultural land use patterns, and the complex's direct and indirect economic and agronomic/environmental impacts on the local economy. The report concludes by discussing the implications for future siting of ethanol-feedlot complexes. Statistical information is included.

Solving an integrated logistics problem arising in grocery distribution

This paper formulates and solves a large-scale out-bound distribution problem arising in the grocery industry. A fleet of homogeneous vehicles based at a single warehouse delivers various products to a number of stores, each vehicle executing a daily tour of stores that must be visited within pre-specified time windows. Two main problems associated with such an operation are: the allocation of warehouse inventory to customer demand in order to achieve an adequate level of service, given that products are not always available; and vehicle route planning, given constraints such as limits to the length of the working day and vehicle capacity. The authors propose an iterative solution to address these problems, solved by means of a heuristic that alternates between the allocation and routing components. They test the solution using real and artificial data to confirm its efficiency and robustness.

States that, in general, classroom activities are largely about mastering the knowledge and skills that have been identified by experts outside the classroom community as necessary for participation in situations students can be expected to encounter in life after school. Argues that this practice actually constrains cognitive development. Claims that in classrooms where teachers aim to create a community of inquiry and students have a part in choosing the topics to be learned, schoolwork becomes "fun", and students have an opportunity to develop their social, affective, and cognitive skills, revealing a degree of engagement rarely seen in traditional classrooms. Makes recommendations, and draws conclusions.

This study examines the roles of south-central Ontario airports with regard to their capacity to meet future demand and to supplement the role of Toronto's Pearson International Airport. The study also examines the need for continued retention of the Pickering lands for future airport purposes. The study covers a planning horizon of about 20 years, using Transport Canada's activity forecasts. The researchers developed a planning model for carrying out sensitivity analyses of where the market may cause forecast traffic to go within the planning horizon under different scenarios. This report presents the results of the study and discusses technical alternatives to an additional major airport for the greater Toronto-Hamilton region. It also discusses whether the Greater Toronto Airports Authority should assume management or ownership of other area airports. An appendix includes descriptions of the airports studied.

Capital is one of a number of factors to be considered when assessing the safety and soundness of each Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation member. An adequate capital base acts as a safety net for the variety of risks that an institution is exposed to in the conduct of its business. It is available as a cushion to absorb possible losses and provides a basis for confidence in the institution by depositors, creditors and others. This document sets out the minimum policies and procedures that each member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation needs to have in place and apply within its capital management program, and the minimum criteria it should use to ensure that it has adequate capital and effective plans to prudently manage its capital requirements.

To assist in providing information about students of aboriginal ancestry in Alberta schools and the kinds of post-secondary programs or services they select, surveys of Alberta public post-secondary institutions were completed in 1988 and 1991. This document presents the results of a survey that builds on those two surveys. It includes statistics on enrolments, services, and numbers of graduates of aboriginal ancestry at Alberta universities, colleges, technical institutes, and vocational colleges. Data for on-reserve programs and services are also included, as well as a comparison with the results of the previous surveys. Appendices provide summaries of institutional programs and on-reserve delivery for 20 Alberta universities, colleges, technical institutes, and vocational colleges.

The Fundamental Issues Group of the Ontario Civil Justice Review has the task of reflecting on the optimal structure for organizing the system of civil disputing in Ontario. The Group commissioned a study paper to identify and analyze the critical policy issues entailed in a fundamental reconsideration of civil disputing in Ontario. This study paper is in two parts, the first concerning the recognition, creation, and formulation of civil disputes, and the second concerning allocation of civil disputes so as to enhance access to justice. Issues considered in the paper include alternative means of dispute resolution, the forms and varieties of adjudication and judicial tasks, the role of the legal profession, classification of conflicts, allocation and streaming of disputes, and accountability. The study paper document includes commentaries on the paper from a panel of 13 experts, offering advice with respect to further lines of inquiry and research for the Fundamental Issues Group to pursue.

Survey of citizens perceptions of the community use of schools : final report

Windsor, ON : Windsor Separate School Board, 1975. 29 p. : ill. ONTERIS ON03841
MICROLOG 95-04978 (1 fiche)

This project grew out of the need of the Windsor Separate School Board to maximize the use of its educational facilities through extended programs for adults and children, both after and during school hours. The immediate objectives of the project were threefold: to increase the community's awareness and understanding of the role and function of the community school; to test the community response to community school activities; and to determine future trends and problems, and the general feasibility of conducting varied community education programs within the board's schools. Project locations were spread across the entire city in suburban, central, and ethnic areas. An "opinionnaire" of 65 questions was constructed, and the data analyzed by age of respondents, whether or not they had children attending the host community school, and the number of children at school and their participation (or lack of it) in the community school. Provides detailed results of the survey, together with explanatory graphs. Makes recommendations.

This paper argues that approaching sustainability from an ecological perspective reveals opportunities for product innovation, employment creation, and development of whole new industries that are transparent to mainstream analyses. To achieve an ecologically sustainable state of development, energy and material throughput of the global economy must be reduced. This paper shows how this problem might be approached by restructuring economic incentives and taxation policy to encourage material and energy conservation and to increase the demand for labor. The paper also shows how thinking about the de facto convergence of the economy with the ecosphere suggests opportunities to develop whole new labor-intensive industries; a plan to link energy policy to forest ecosystems is presented as an example. The paper concludes by noting the barriers to implementing the policies needed for sustainability and the popular misconceptions about sustainability.

This paper considers practical issues in implementing sustainable development concepts for utility planning. Initial sections discuss sustainability concepts, emphasizing the rule of value tradeoffs and the need for direct consideration of interests of affected parties to help overcome opposition when policies change. The paper discusses value-focused thinking as a useful approach for clarifying value tradeoffs inherent in sustainability debates. An example of electrical planning in British Columbia illustrates the basis for decisions involving sustainability and the use of information about preferences of key groups for the creation of alternatives that stand a better chance of implementation.

The concept of sustainable development offers an integrating purpose, backed by popular appeal and national power, to define Canadian foreign policy in the 1990s. This paper presents an overview of a Canadian foreign policy with sustainable development as its focus and suggests the policy directions that might flow from such an approach. Aspects of the proposed foreign policy include strengthening of trade-environment links, following the strategies developed in the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, coordination of resource redeployment, building social accountability, fostering environmental security, and global governance. The paper includes proposals applicable to specific regions, including Europe, the Americas, Asia-Pacific, and Africa/Middle East. This paper describes, within a hierarchically organized taxonomy, the specific values of wilderness which predominate in the literature. The hierarchy of wilderness values presented include those market and non-market values that directly or indirectly satisfy human demands, those spiritual values that transform human demands, and those ecological values that provide life support to human and non-human species. The taxonomy is designed for the purpose of advancing understanding of the various values originating from wilderness as well as highlighting their significance. Such taxonomies can also help inform the land allocation decision-making process by providing a common information source for professionals and stakeholders. CO CU EV NR PR SC

By Gordon Wells. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1993. 24 p. : Bibl. ON-TERIS ON06655 MICROLOG 95-05290 (1 fiche)

Explains why the proposal to democratize the decision-making involved in educational change, by recognizing and drawing upon the very different expertise of inquiring teachers, has met with opposition from many who have a vested interest in maintaining the status quo. Claims that to change schools, so that they become places where students acquire the dispositions as well as the knowledge to enable them to change their societies, there must be a change in the conditions under which teachers' education and professional development take place. Proposes giving teachers more voice in educational decision-making, and encouraging them to develop their own expertise in planning and enacting curriculum through critical inquiry. Presents a teaching/learning model based on communities of action and inquiry. Discusses the role of the university in bringing about educational renewal and development, and suggests ways in which teachers can change schools from within by becoming informed action-researchers. Outlines the key aspects of action research as a mode of learning. Concludes that to achieve a school-wide commitment to inquiry, school administrators need to develop new ways of thinking about their role as curriculum leaders by seeing it more in terms of teacher education than terms of supervision and evaluation. ED ON OR PR SS

Introduces the Thinking Skills Project, a 3 year undertaking involving 3 southern Ontario, largely rural boards of education. Each of these boards designated 3 schools to participate in the project, making 9 schools in all. In each board, 1 school proceeded as usual without intervention (called Control), 1 had its teachers involved in peer coaching programs to support traditional methods of teaching science curriculum (called Coaching), and 1 had teachers teaching explicit thinking skills with peer coaching support (called Experimental). The Experimental treatment followed a model which involved instruction in specific thinking areas. The Coaching group used traditional methods of teaching science curriculum combined with the peer coaching component. The Control group used traditional methods of teaching the same science curriculum as the other 2 groups. All groups, including the control group, had access to the expertise of a science consultant, and resource kits for each unit which included activities, curriculum ideas and materials. Concludes with some classroom observation data, addressing the extent to which the 3 treatments were distinct from one another in practice. ED ON OR PR SS

The author first examines the concepts of ecology, ecophilosophy, and ecological wisdom. He then reviews the regional planning philosophy of Benton MacKaye, grounded in the preservation and restoration of the indigenous American environment, as a precursor to the concept of bioregional frameworks. These frameworks advance a strategy of subverting and transforming metropolitan civilization into distinct bioregional cultures, or sustainable, self-reliant economies networked interregionally. Finally, the author outlines the steps to be taken toward achieving a bioregional planning framework guided by an ecophilosophy.

The general scope of this report includes four main categories of actors in the community development process focused on the urban poor in Thailand: slum dwellers, people's organizations, domestic nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), and international funding agencies. Processes of information feedback which can potentially change funding or other community development resource inputs, combined with analyses of gathered information, are known as evaluation. This report analyzes evaluation of Thai NGOs, linking field evidence with recent literature about participatory program evaluation to identify opportunities and constraints which might arise with the introduction of more collaborative evaluation processes. The report includes a case study of the Human Settlement Foundation, an indigenous Thai NGO. That study analyzes the purposes, methods, levels of participation, strengths, and weaknesses of external and internal evaluation processes as they are applied to NGOs.

In western Canada, aspen logs are typically stored outdoors in piles for several months to a year after cutting. Phenol-rich leachates have been observed emanating from such piles during or after spring melt. These leachates could threaten water bodies near aspen woodpiles. The researchers conducted a laboratory study to determine the rate and quantity of leaching loss from aspen wood, the strength and persistence of toxicity of the leachate to aquatic life, the chemical nature of the leachate, and the main classes of toxic constituents. This paper presents the results of those experiments, including the chemical analyses and bioassay data.

The EA practices considered include both project-specific impact assessment and EA as a component of resource management and planning. Three of the studies are case studies conducted in close consultation with members of a specific aboriginal community, and involved bowhead whale management practices, evaluation of pipeline impact statements, and a Vancouver Island tribe's management system. Two other studies provide complementary overviews of the field; one identifies methods of documenting traditional knowledge and the other is on the role of traditional knowledge in aboriginal self-management and in management regimes involving the state. The last two studies present an agenda for further research on traditional ecological knowledge and EA, and guidelines for conducting participatory research.

Trends and implications of retail change in Ottawa-Carleton

By the Green Group, Regional Real Estate Consultants, and John Winter Associates Limited. Ottawa : Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, Planning & Property Dept. ; City of Ottawa, Dept. of Economic Development and Dept. of Planning and Development, 1994. xli, 161 p. : Ill., Maps, Bibl. MICROLOG 95-05242 (2 fiche)

The Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality and the city of Ottawa commissioned a study to identify the impact of the changing retail environment on land use planning in the Ottawa region. This report first explains regional policies and the new market realities that have led to a recent decline in the Ottawa central area's retail market share. The report then examines consumer opinion and behavior, including retail choices, anticipated future shopping patterns, and means of transportation used. It reviews the new demand and supply pressures in the Ottawa-Carleton market arising from such factors as population growth, personal income, consumer preferences, and changes in the nature of retailing brought about by computerization and warehouse-type stores. The report concludes by discussing planning issues and making planning recommendations that take into account the relation of retail uses with community development.

NASA views the construction and operation of a permanently manned space station as the critical next step in advancing human space exploration. The mission of the space station will be three-fold. It will provide an orbiting research base to assess the effects of long stays in space on human physiology and well-being. It will function as an advanced research laboratory to study near-zero gravity, near-perfect vacuum and lack of atmospheric interference, and it will be an engineering test-bed providing the opportunity to learn how to build, operate and maintain complex systems in space. This paper provides a background and analysis which looks at the space station, Canada's Space Station Program, the mobile servicing system, the Strategic Technologies in Automation and Robotics (STEAR) Program, and other international contributions (Japanese Experimental Module, European Space Agency's Pressurized Module).

One of the main factors limiting the use of Pronone 10G herbicide is the lack of appropriate equipment designed for low-volume applications (10-20 kilograms per hectare). This report describes the use of a flow control plate installed in a Maruyama Model MD150DX backpack air-blast spreader to regulate Pronone application rates. The plate enables precise adjustment of flow at the low rates required for ground application. The equipment typically produces a 60-foot swath at a coverage rate of four hectares per hour. The report details the construction and installation of a flow control plate and describes proper application technique as well as methods for calibrating flow and determining swath width.

L'un de ses aspects importants est que l'analyse est faite sur la base du DSC de résidence des patients et non de celui où l'opération a été effectuée. L'étude porte sur neuf opérations et couvre une période de deux ans s'étendant du 1<sup>er</sup> avril 1990 au 31 mars 1992. L'ampleur des variations dans les taux de chaque intervention chirurgicale a été étudiée et la part de cette variation pouvant être expliquée par certaines caractéristiques des DSC a été évaluée.

The purpose of this paper is to explore the contemporary evolution of the British Columbia economy, and more specifically to address the hypothesis of a post-staples or at least a transitional era of growth, change, and development. The paper describes a resource-based economy in transition, including a basic characterization of the province as a mature, advanced staple economy, an outline of cyclical change and structural transformation, and aspects of development and diversification. The paper then analyzes problems of structural adjustment, transition, and sustainability, incorporating a discussion of the province's sustainability deficit, the prospects of a post-staples economy, and changes within both the internal economic geography and external spatial relationships. This is followed by a discussion of some policy implications and options for British Columbia's transformation to a more sustainable, post-staples economic future. Finally, the paper focuses on the potential wider implications of the province's experience.

Ce manuel contient huit bulletins d'analyse agricole préparés par la Division de l'économie agricole et des politiques de réglementation de la Direction générale des politiques. Ces bulletins font état de la situation financière des principaux types de ferme au Canada, notamment les fermes productrices de céréales et d'oléagineux, de pommes de terre, de fruits et légumes, les serrières et pépiniéristes, les fermes laitières, les élevages de bétail, les élevages de porcs ainsi que les fermes productrices de volailles et d'œufs. Les bulletins s'attachent à la situation financière de 1991 en établissant une comparaison avec celle de 1990.

Les analyses exposées dans ce rapport sont fondées sur des estimations tirées du Programme des données fiscales et de l'Enquête nationale sur les fermes. Le Programme des données fiscales, élaboré par Statistique Canada, est une composante importante de la Base de données sur les fermes. On y trouve des données sur des variables clés telles que les revenus et les dépenses agricoles selon la province, le type de fermes et la classe de revenus ainsi que certaines données sur la répartition des bénéfices agricoles. Ce programme fournit aussi des données sur les bénéfices d'exploitation et les revenus hors ferme des exploitants et des familles agricoles possédant une seule ferme non constituée en société.

States that administrators, researchers, and school authorities in general continue to treat students as the silent majority. Reports on students' views on various aspects of schooling, and their suggestions for change ranging from teacher ethics to school organization. Indicates that school administrators are failing to avail themselves of a valuable asset in problem-solving and decision-making if they fail to consult students. Discusses the implications for school leadership within the contextual limitations of this study.

In recent years, the presence in Canada of individuals who may, as Nazis or Nazi collaborators, have committed war crimes in Europe 40 to 45 years ago has raised a number of issues, including: how many such individuals currently reside in Canada; how they came to be here; whether they should be the object of investigation and prosecution; and, if so, what means might be used to bring them to justice. Since no authoritative study of these issues existed, the Deschenes Commission was appointed in 1985 to investigate and report on the subject.

This report presents the results of monitoring to check the attainment of water quality objectives in a number of basins. The results are summarized in tables. The report indicates where conditions are acceptable and provides a warning of where further evaluation may be needed. Various variables were chosen for testing. Following the description of the program, the text presents the results of the quality assurance program. It then gives a provincial overview of the attainment monitoring results, and ends with the tabulated data for each body of water, by region.

The Exploits River Basin is the largest basin on the island of Newfoundland. Abitibi Price Ltd controls the basin's water resources through two long-term leases. Expiry of these leases in 2004 and 2038 and will provide an opportunity for the province to renegotiate the leases to better allocate and optimize the use of water resources in the basin. This report examines water availability in various parts of the basin with respect to current and future demands, identifies locations where water supply/demand imbalances, constraints, and conflicts are likely to occur, and investigates various options for the sustainable management of the basin's water resources. The study methodology includes application of Environment Canada's Water Use Analysis Model to compare water supply and demand at selected basin locations and to assess a number of possible development scenarios. The report includes analysis of the modelling results, a user manual for converting model data to a form displayable in a geographic information system, and tables of streamflow data for the basin.

As a result of millennia-long cultural differences, the water problems in the Jordan River Basin are particularly complex. This book presents a thorough analysis of the water problem in the Basin, including the historical background, the environmental preconditions embodied in the local hydroclimate, the landscape topography and hydrogeography, and the problems of past water management. The book then reviews the three crises of water in Israel: the water quantity crisis, which is economic in character; the water quality crisis, which is ecological; and the geostrategic crisis, which is political. The analysis is largely limited to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, but Syrian and Jordanian interests are also treated on occasion. Finally, the book discusses regional options for water management and the steps taken toward resolution of the water crises in light of recent peace agreements in the region.

To study the possible impacts of plain and generic packaging on tobacco consumption, Health Canada commissioned a panel of seven experts to develop the research objectives, packaging models, and protocols for evaluating the packaging of tobacco products. This report presents the results of the panel's research, including a literature review and a preliminary qualitative study. The panel's research objectives were to assess the potential impact of plain and generic packaging of cigarettes on the likelihood of smoking uptake, on the recognition and recall of health warning messages on cigarette packages, and on the likelihood of cessation of smoking; to evaluate alternative designs for plain and generic packaging of cigarettes; and to project possible industry responses to such packaging. The report provides results of the six parts of the main study, including surveys, visual and recall/recognition experiments, and analysis of industry effects.

This study was undertaken to determine if the use of glyphosate herbicide is reducing forage resources and subsequent overwinter utilization by moose in boreal forest plantations for up to three years after treatment. The investigators conducted observations on four glyphosate-treated and control paired cutovers near Thunder Bay, Ontario. Study methods included surveys of moose pellet groups, browse surveys of sample vegetation plots, and aerial reconnaissance of moose tracks. This report presents the results of the study and the differences in moose-related observations between treated and control areas. The report also discusses the forest and wildlife management implications of the results.

To retain the existing populations of woodland caribou in northwestern Ontario, heightened awareness and a better understanding of woodland caribou and their ecology are needed. This note describes the extent to which woodland caribou ecology is understood in northwestern Ontario. Where relevant, the note points out differences from moose, a species more familiar to resource managers in the region. Information in the note covers such topics as identification, population distribution, reproduction, mortality, summer and winter ecology, compatibility with moose and deer, and forest management practice.

The Saskatchewan government and educational system are working toward the establishment of a coordinated, comprehensive, and responsive service system for children and families. Of particular concern is the growing number of children with problems that create barriers to their school participation and success. This document outlines a policy framework for a collaboration that will work toward establishing a collaborative culture and an integrated approach to service delivery for at-risk children. The document reviews the reasons for such an approach, the integration of school-linked services, and the guiding principles and strategies of a collaborative culture. It then provides information and guidelines for developing a collaborative culture to coordinate and integrate planning and service delivery. Appendices provide examples of integrated school-linked services projects in Saskatchewan, a description of the risk factors and demographics of at-risk children in the province, and a glossary.

Working with a teacher in the zone of proximal development : action research on the learning and teaching of science

By Gordon Wells. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1993. 30 p. : Bibl. ON-TERIS ON06650

MICROLOG 95-05289 (1 fiche)

Aims to present a number of critical episodes resulting from the collaboration between the author and a grade 6 teacher in a public school located in a multi-ethnic community in Greater Toronto. This collaborative action research focuses on the following question: how should one enact the dual role of teacher-educator and research in the context of a classroom-based inquiry which is simultaneously a form of teacher development? Argues that teacher development can be seen as a form of professional apprenticeship. Discusses the negotiation of collaboration with the teacher, the process of getting to know each other, and the negotiation of the topic for inquiry (a science unit on zoology). Provides examples of dialogues between teacher and students and between the research and the teacher. Concludes that teaching, at any level, demands the ability to mediate between the resources of the culture and the needs of particular individuals. Lists references.

For many young individuals (those aged 15-24), the transition from school to work means entering the labour market relatively unskilled, inexperienced, unfamiliar with job search and unaware of the job opportunities open to them. Consequently, many of them face the possibility of unemployment during their initial years as members of the labour force. Despite the relatively high level of public attention given to the issue of unemployment, this attention seldom addresses the various types of unemployment and their underlying causes. This paper attempts to do this with respect to present-day youth unemployment.
